Melody Lingers As Session's Song Fades Out

By BRUCE YEMEN

The song is over, but how much of the melody will linger on?

That's the question left over from the 1970 legislative session which ended Friday.

The Social Credit government brought in a number of bills with a social reform theme in an obvious effort to get more in tune with modern society.

But it was a cautious, loosely-knit composition with a considerable amount of scope for the government to alter the melody by order-in-council.

'Experimental' Bills

There were "experimental" bills aimed at controlling pollution caused by littering, at making adults out of 19-year-olds and at controlling credit card distribution.

There were shifts in "emphasis" to less film censorship, more humane and productive treatment of prison inmates and greater reliance on individuals as the first line of defence against pollution which was by far the most popular topic of MLAs in all parties.

But there was also a continuing reluctance to spend money against pollution.

Perhaps the most certain improvement in social legislation was the overhaul in the Landlord and Tenant Act giving tenants a fighting chance against landlords.

Wide Impact

The reduction of the age of majority to 19 was a simple bill that could have profound impact on life in British Columbia.

But there was a tendency for government ministers to be cautious about their reforms, to say they "hoped" they would work out.

The opposition complained frequently that the government's legislation was loosely drafted, leaving scope for ministerial inaction or discretion or cabinet decision to alter not only the effect of legislation but to defeat its very purpose.

It was more than legislation that could be described as loose.

Played it Cool

In this post-election session, the MLAs played their politics a little looser than they will as the next election gets closer.

Like hockey players in the early season, the politicians often skated around with their heads down and eyes on the puck instead of on the opponents. Nobody got "creamed" this time around.

The most intense, persistent and roughest attacks of the session came from Bob Williams (NDP—Vancouver

FRUITS OF THEIR LABORS

Following are some of the changes in law approved at the 1970 session of the legislature, most of them in effect as of Friday, but a few important ones awaiting future proclamation by the cabinet:

- Reduction of the legal age for adulthood from 21 to 19, to come into effect at a date to be set by the cabinet, probably in a few months. The bill will enable 19-year-olds to drink alcohol, get married without parental consent and to exercise the full range of rights of adults.
- Mandatory two cent refunds for drink containers of glass, tin or other materials, subject to ministerial discretion and coming into effect at a later date when the bill, the new Litter Act, is proclaimed. Stricter controls on dumping of sewage and other trash on public property are also provided.
- New protection for tenants against landlords by putting their relationship on a standard contract basis, thus removing many special landlord privilages such as that of seizing furniture for unpaid rent. Three-month notice required for rent increases under a tenancy agreements and a freeze on rents between Feb. 25 and the coming into effect of the legislation on proclamation by the cabinet at a time yet to be announced.
- Employers' organizations peritted to be accredited for collective bargaining purposes under the Labor Relations Act.
- An overhaul of the Land Act preventing foreign citizens from buying crown land directly from the government and giving new power to remove hippies living on crown land.
- Estate tax exemptions raised to leave most estates tax-free under a value of $160,000 but with charitable estates' 90 per cent taxable for the first time and retro-

Belfast's Heart Rocked by Bombs

BELFAST (CP) — Terrorists exploded three bombs in the heart of Belfast today, injuring at least two persons, despite a British Army warning that troops may shoot to kill when they encounter rioters in the streets. The bombs went off over a span of 10 hours.

The third bomb wrecked a real estate agency in Donegall Street.

The scene of the bombing was only a few hundred yards away from Royal Avenue, where an early morning blast destroyed a large store occupied by a tailoring firm.

Scores of windows in stores and offices were blown out in the Donegall Street blast, which was heard for miles. Ambulances hurried to the area, which was cordoned off by police and troops.

Dozens of screaming girl employees dashed into the street from shops and offices.

Experts and bomb-disposal officers were among the first to arrive on the scene and open investigations.

On being informed of the earlier explosion in Royal Avenue, Prime Minister James Chichester-Clark said "Those responsible for such an outrage showed a complete and callous disregard for human life and property."

Crux Remanded In Vancouver Court

VANCOUVER (CP) — A. G. Duncan Crux, extradited from the Bahamas to face fraud charges involving about $1,000,000, was remanded to Monday when he made a 60-second appearance in provincial court today.

Jack McGiverh, lawyer for the 63-year-old lawyer-financier, former president of the now-liquidated Commonwealth Trust Co., said he will make a bail application Monday.

CROWN OPPOSES

The crown said the application will be opposed.

Crux, who said nothing during his brief court appearance, was brought here by commercial jet Friday night and booked into a city jail cell after losing a 10-month battle in Bahamian courts against a Canadian extradition bid.

His last-ditch appeal to the Bahamian governor was rejected this week.

He thus became the second former officer of the B.C.-based Commonwealth financial empire to be brought here to face charges.

Cornelius Polvliet, 59, former director and adviser of the Commonwealth group of companies, was arrested in California Oct. 1, and is in custody here.

He was remanded to Thursday on 17 charges of theft and fraud.

SCOTT WALLACE

Hospital Cutback Shakes Officials

Socred MLA Dr. G. Scott Wallace said today a provincial government edict chopping funds for operating hospitals can only produce lower standards of health care.

The government backbencher and local hospital spokesmen reacted with a mixture of sympathy and frustration today to Health Minister Ralph Loffmark's announcement Friday that the money to meet rising costs just isn't available.

After months of increasingly blunt warnings, Loffmark announced that only 70 per cent of salary increases granted by hospitals for the current year can be met by the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service.

To avoid serious financial problems, he said, hospitals will have to take "immediate action" to reduce costs to pay the other 30 per cent themselves.

Wallace, Oak Bay MLA, said the policy decision comes as news to him and he wasn't involved in discussions leading to it.

No one argues rising hospital costs are a "problem of great dimension" but he questioned Loffmark's method of tackling it.

Hospitals are left with two choices:

- Reduce staff, which in his opinion can only lead to reducing the standard of medical care available.
- Raise the needed money themselves, which is just not practical.

The net effect of Loffmark's ruling, in a roundabout way, is to try and enforce wage restraint on a particular segment of the economy, namely hospital workers, said Wallace.

"While I recognize the need to control hospital costs, I question whether this is the right way."

40,000 March For War

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — Proclaiming "God will give victory," thousands of persons carrying American flags rallied on Pennsylvania Avenue today to demand stronger action to win the war in Vietnam.

The "March for Victory," led by radio preacher Carl McIntire, tied up traffic over a wide area of downtown Washington.

Park police estimated there were 40,000 persons in the crowd that gathered near the Capitol to march to an afternoon rally of speeches, songs and prayer on the Washington Monument grounds.

McIntire, who has accused President Nixon of conducting a "no-win" policy in Vietnam, said before the march he expected anywhere from 5,000 to 100,000 marchers.

The marchers carried red, white and blue placards proclaiming "Win The War," "Blockade Haiphong Harbor" and "God Will Give Victory."

Most appeared to be middle-aged. There was a sprinkling of college-age youngsters and small children.

FLASHES 'V'

Heavy police units patrolled the streets around the march area, but there was no heckling or counter-demonstration.

One police officer who drove by in a sqaud car smiled and flashed a "V" for victory sign at fellow officers on the street.

The mood of the marchers was polite and subdued in comparison to anti-war protestors who staged the largest demonstration ever held in the nation's capital last November.

SAUCE FOR GOOSE ISN'T FOR GANDER

What's sauce for the goose isn't necessarily sauce for the gander, a local driver woefully learned in court Friday.

Judge J. A. Byers of the traffic court fined Robert Warren McNally, 22, of Work Point Barracks, $350 and prohibited him from driving for four months for a breath test content over .08 per cent.

Earlier in the day, Judge William Ostler threw out the same charge against John M. Soan, 18, of 315 Alder, because of a Supreme Court ruling Thursday in Vancouver which made the Criminal Code compulsory breath test law null and void.

Shot Fired At Postal Truck

MONTREAL (CP) — As an emergency federal cabinet meeting in Ottawa discussed Montreal's mail dispute, a rifleman in Montreal fired into the windshield of a rented postal truck Friday.

Rejean Masse, an A. F. Baillargeon Express driver who was loading his vehicle in the downtown CNR Bonaventure terminal yards at the time of the incident, said he heard two shots but did not see the culprit. He continued his mail delivery afterwards.

Postal officials said a .22-calibre rifle was apparently used in the shooting.

Meanwhile two other Baillargeon trucks, not hired to carry mail were damaged by vandals Friday. There were no injuries.

In Ottawa, the cabinet was reported to be reconsidering its decision to bring Montreal mail drivers into the public service.

The cabinet meeting began amid reports Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey might tender his resignation over handling of the dispute. However, the minister denied the rumor.

DELIVERIES MADE

Eighty-five rented trucks made deliveries to Montreal's 33 postal substations as the city's former mail truck drivers, unemployed since the government takeover of city mail transportation Wednesday, met for the third day to discuss strategy.

Six rented trucks and an escorting security car were attacked Thursday. Windows were broken, and in two instances, tires were slashed.

Hijack Jet Not Sighted

TOKYO (CP) — North Korea announced a departure time tonight for the return of a Japanese jetliner that flew to Pyongyang with three crew members and a Japanese official as hostages, but the plane was not sighted or heard from long after the announcement.

Japan Air Lines officials indicated Pyongyang might not have the proper ground equipment to start the engines of the Boeing 727.

President Shizumaro Matsuo of the airline told a news conference adjustments or repairs might be delaying the plane's departure.

Beers, Jeers, Laughs and Violence Show at Fort Invasion

Times education reporter Bob Mitchell went to Seattle last Thursday to cover the Indian "invasion" of Fort Lawton, the third in a month. In his report then he told how the Indians, including a contingent of Canadian natives, caught the U.S. Army flatfooted. Today, he relates the "Keystone Cops" side of the conflict, along with the more serious aspects.

By BOB MITCHELL
Times Staff

SEATTLE — The bottle of beer sailed over the 10-foot wire fence that rings Fort Lawton and smacked into the soldier's outstretched palm.

"Nice catch, man, do you play ball?" called Gary Bray from the road that ran outside the fence.

The soldier hid the bottle in the grass beside his M-16 while his partner holding a two-way radio looked around to make sure no one had seen.

The incident was typical of relations between soldiers who occupy the fort and the United Indians of All Tribes who have besieged it since March 10.

Officially the soldiers and MPs are under orders to patrol the 1,100-acre, forested fort and arrest any Indians who get inside.

Unofficially most of them hope the Indians win the struggle to get full administrative authority of the fort when it is abandoned by the military later this year.

Some 80 Indians were detained and later released Thursday during the third invasion of the fort since early March.

Gary Bray, one of the UIAT leaders, was released around 2 p.m. He laughed as he told of the chase inside.

"Me and about 19 guys circled down by the ballpark, and the MPs saw us and laid down some gas.

"But the wind blew the gas back at them and we got back into the woods.

"I was layin' down in some bushes, and one of them passed about two feet away from me. I was smoking a cigarette and he says: 'They must be around here, I can smell one of them'."

To a white person the game of hide-and-seek the Indians played with the army probably sounds about as serious as The Keystone Cops.

But there has been some violence. Early in the siege a young demonstrator who was talking outside the main gates with some MPs was suddenly grabbed, pulled inside and beaten.

Two men drove past one night brandishing guns and promising to come back to kill.

And a tavern near the fort has refused to serve the Indians.

Leaders of the UIAT conceded most of army personnel are genuinely sympathetic to their cause. But while the Indians are unarmed the army has tracking dogs, tear gas, anti-personnel radar and the usual assortment of guns.

One reason for army restraint has probably been close coverage of the siege by Seattle news media and public opinion favorable to the Indians.

. . . SESSION ANALYSIS

East) who appeared to come into his own as a fighter who can hurt the government.

Showing a singular lack of trust in the government's ability to guard the public interest, Williams launched a broad attack on "special privilege" which he sees as a cancer in government.

Bonner a Target

He went after former attorney-general Robert Bonner for what he saw as a conflict of interest in Bonner's relationship with liquor and horse-racing interests during his time as a minister.

He slugged toe-to-toe with Resources Minister Ray Williston on his relations with the "forest giants," with people seeking crown land privileges such as in Cypress Bowl, the controversial West Vancouver recreational development.

Williams more than any other opposition member symbolized the perennial gap between the government and the opposition — he just couldn't bring himself to accept the measure of faith that every government pleads for — or simply demands — in carrying on so much public business in secrecy and semi-secrecy.

Enjoyed Insults

For his efforts, Williams was systematically insulted by a battery of cabinet ministers and backbenchers. He appeared to enjoy it.

Oddly enough, it was another Williams whose star rose highest among the five-member Liberal group.

Allan Williams (L—West Vancouver - Howe Sound, looking distinguished, sounding reasonable, doing his homework, kept the pressure on the government with a low-key style that made him almost immune to counter-attack.

He and Dave Brousson (L—North Vancouver-Capilano) scored well throughout the session, with Brousson leading the battle against proposed flooding of the Skagit Valley to provide power for Seattle.

Led Attack

Garde Gardom (L—Vancouver-Point Grey) made the rafters rock with his forays against the government's handling of the Commonwealth Trust collapse in 1968.

Robert Strachan (NDP—Cowichan - Malahat), enjoying his first session in 13 years as an ordinary MLA instead of as opposition leader, proved that he is able to bring philosophy into the house and make it relevant to the details of politics.

The traditional issues of recent years were still there, with Opposition Leader Dave Barrett perhaps getting the prize for the most original twist aimed at expressing exasperation with Education Minister Donald Brothers' education policy.

$1.49 Bargain Day

Barrett tried to reduce Brothers' salary to $1.49 in a variation of the usual non-confidence motion reducing a minister's salary by $1.

But Barrett kept his well-known sense of humor under control for the most part during the session, perhaps in an effort to avoid being labelled by Premier Bennett as a "joker."

Bennett made only sporadic stabs at the opposition in a session that was clearly a time for enjoying the fruits of his huge personal victory in the Aug. 27 election.

Just how much wheeling and dealing was going on behind the Socred scenes among candidates for Bennett's job, when it becomes available, is difficult to say.

'Minister of Defence'

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson and Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell were playing it cool for the most part in the legislature. Herb Capozzi (SC—Vancouver Centre) was again heckled as "the minister of defence" for his frequent attacks on the opposition in support of various cabinet ministers, some of whom needed his help.

Welfare Minister Phil Gaglardi seemed to have more than enough to worry about in his own department.

active denial of appeal to organizations declared non-charitable by Premier Bennett in the past two years.

- Change of emphasis in the Motion Pictures Act from censorship to classification but retention of the censorship power. Films will continue to be classified as general, adult (suitable for those over 16 years of age) and restricted (18 years or over).
- More protection for employees seeking unpaid wages, giving such debts priority over all other debts.
- Broad power for the minister of mines to order any mine in the province to ship up to half of its production to a designated B.C. processing plant, a measure aimed at guaranteeing a supply of ore for any copper smelter which might be built in B.C.
- Changes in the Municipal Act to facilitate formation of Indian reserves into municipalities.
- Lifting of the ban against formation of medical corporations by doctors.
- Tightening up sale of crown land to people with prior rights because of mining claims by requiring market value be paid rather than the traditional $5 an acre.
- Incorporation of air pollution into the Pollution Control Act and a deadline of Dec. 31, 1970 for all land and water polluters to report details of their pollution, with a Dec. 31, 1971 deadline for air polluters.
- New powers enabling the Minister of Health to take over any hospital in the province in the public interest.

. . . INDIANS

"Man, I hope they try and use those clubs," said a tall Indian called J. C., "cause I want to kick some ass."

When the army declared the fort surplus the city of Seattle announced it could use the land for recreational purposes.

The UIAT claims the fort on moral, heridiitary and legal grounds. It formally belonged to the Duwamish tribe, but was turned into a military establishment about 100 years ago after the United States government declared it not fit for human habitation.

Perhaps the main source of resistance to the Indian claim comes from the wealthy Magnolia district in which the fort is located.

Indians and sympathetic whites are convinced real estate developers will be allowed to carve up the wooded land if the city falls heir to the fort.

Magnolia is the plushest area of Seattle. Houses in the $50,000-$200,000 stand like monuments to developers' past exploits.

Meanwhile Indian spokesmen like Gary Bray, a former law student, and leader Bernie Whitebear fulfil numerous speaking engagements to get more public support.

Following the demonstration Thursday the camp—two teepees, two tents, kitchen and portable toilet—was dismantled and moved away.

The camp was not really habitable, Whitebear said, because sanitary conditions were worsening and health of picketers—some of them had been there since the siege began—was not getting any better.

Whitebear, short, dressed in blue denim pants and jacket, is in his late thirites, but looks 10 years younger. He has respect of youngsters in the group—some are spoiling for a fight with MPs, but Whitebear has kept demonstrations non-violent.

He carefully answers all the questions reporters throw at him, possibly because he knows the Indians need coverage and support of news media.

Late Thursday afternoon those who had witnessed or participated in the invasion assembled around the main gate waiting for "brothers" and "sisters" who had been detained.

An officer came down to the gate to announce to reporters the army had evidence a fire under one of the barracks that day had been set by arsonists, probably the Indian invaders.

Bray said it was probably caused by flames from a tear gas canister. Indians had orders not to use violence or vandalism, he said.

The mood of the crowd was jubilant despite the bad publicity value of the fire. Somebody passed out beer, and one of the girls produced a loaf of bread and a package of bologna for sandwiches.

There were jeers for a radio news broadcast that said there had been no violence on the part of the army.

. . . HOSPITAL CUTBACKS

The Oak Bay MLA repeated again a theme he has aired in the legislature — that the people who use the hospitals should pay a more practical share than the $1-a-day they are now charged under the province's hospital insurance plan.

A day in local hospitals now costs $47, he said. If a patient paid $3 of this it would produce between $6 million and $7 million more in revenue. Paying $5 a day would produce $12 million to $14 million.

In his announcement Friday Loffmark said it is considered that "reductions in staffing" should be applied primarily to those employees involved in the "largest wage increase group."

"However, the decision as to how the uncovered cost increase should be absorbed is a responsibility of each individual hospital."

Loffmark issued his warning in the form of a press release and in an interview added that the cuts ordered now will be "nothing compared to what hospitals can expect in a few years" if salary costs continue to spiral.

The B.C. cost-cutting move is part of a nation-wide effort to control rising hospital costs and is not a "capricious" act of government, he said.

"We will probably reach the stage very soon where the amount of money made available by government for medical care will have to be limited," he said.

The minister in his written statement said that by far the largest portion of increased operating costs for hospitals will result from salary increase and fringe benefits already agreed to in contracts.

For one union the increase is 13 per cent in 1970, he said.

The total increase in the BCHIS hospital budget this year will be $25 million, up from $150 million to $175 million.

If the costs continue rising at the same rate it would be necessary to spend $370 million in 1975 and $750 million in 1980, he warned.

"It is clear that a continuation of the cost escalation could, within a relatively few years, bankrupt any government."

Dr. Alex Wood, chairman, St. Joseph's Hospital board:

"Further restraints will place a very heavy burden on all members of our staff . . this will be very very difficult . . ."

Hugh Curtis, chairman of the regional hospital board:

"I wonder if this is the correct way, to arbitarily strike a percentage figure and say, 'that's it.' It's a great opportunity for the minister (Loffmark) to show leadership and encourage what he seeks rather than dictatorialy impose a figure . . ."

James Cumming, the deputy chairman of the regional hospital board:

". . . Possibly he (Loffmark) should take over a hospital and using it as a pilot plant show the others how to do it . . ."

D. H. Lawson, board chairman at Royal Jubilee Hospital:

"If you're going to have to cut back on staff, you're going to have to cut back on patient care. And that's the last thing we want to do."

Fraser Slide Cleared

BOSTON BAR (CP) — Work crews today cleared the Canadian National Railway mainline after it was blocked Friday by a 300-foot rock slide in the Fraser Canyon.

A spokesman said the line was restored after crews blasted away rock that was up to 40 feet deep on the track near this community about 125 miles northeast of Vancouver.

CNR trains were re-routed over CPR tracks while workers cleared the line.

Injunction Granted

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Supreme Court Friday granted the Bank of Montreal an injunction against a former employee who is charged with embezzling more than $30,000. Mr. Justice A. B. Macfarlane issued the injunction restraining Thomas Kissick, 29, of Vancouver, from disposing of any monies or goods purchased with money the bank claims he stole from one of its branches.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET JR.

When you perspire a lot and the perspiration can't evaporate, the temperature of your body will be sure to rise. That phenomenon sometimes causes a flurry in a Red Cross Blood Bank.

For example, if the morning is humid and warm, it is very likely that a few of the blood donors at the bank will have temperatures that are over 99.5. They are then rejected because their temperature is too high for blood-taking. Sometimes the weather is so hot and damp that every single prospective donor will have a higher than normal temperature and be rejected.

The reason that temperatures are taken of every blood donor is that they could be ill with disease that could be passed on through the blood they give.

If every volunteer had a slight temperature they might be asked to return later and it is pretty certain they will have normal temperatures that will permit their blood to be taken, provided the weather is a little cooler and a good bit less humid.

Budget Vote Needs Lady Luck's Smile

By JIM HUME

With a little bit of luck Victoria city council and city hall staffers may be able to persuade voters before April 30 that a five-year plan is a good thing.

The term "with luck" is used because following Thursday and Friday's debacle on the budget good sense appears to have filed city hall's executive wing, at least temporarily.

Hume

Prior to the Thursday session Mayor Courtney Haddock's policy review committee convened several head-knocking sessions to hammer out a five-year blueprint to present to the people.

At those sessions a general format and a date for the vote, April 30, were agreed to.

Naturally, the preliminary debate was closed to the people.

Following last year's disaster it could have been presumed that light and air and a steady dissemination of knowledge was what a capital budget required. But, alas, such is not the thinking of the wise merchandizers of Centennial Square.

Four council members sat in the inner sanctum for the preliminary debate. Mayor Haddock and Aldermen Peter Pollen, Percy Frampton and Cecil Parrott.

Eventually they emerged from the lair with a $5.5 million capital budget proposal. A few days later they presented that budget, in what is loosely termed "informal session," and received unanimous backing from council on the April 30 date and cautious approval of the budget itself.

(An "informal session" takes place when council gets together behind closed doors to decide what brave action it will later take in the open. A sort of dress rehearsal for the democratic process.)

Anyway, all was going well. Council members knew that Olafson was going to try and get the Garbally Road yard items back in the budget (and he did, right on cue) and that Frampton would root for a fire training centre.

Inside City Hall

After all a little open debate is good for the soul.

Unfortunately, some time late Wednesday one of the leading characters either forgot what the script called for, or decided to do a last minute re-write on a couple of key paragraphs.

As a result, Thursday morning, a few hours before council was to officially receive the mayor's recommendation for the April 30 vote, Haddock blew his lines.

It was his advice, he is reported as saying, that April 30 would be a bad time to hold the budget vote. He is also reported as saying the fall would be a better time.

The latter thought he denies expressing (although he has made the statement several times in this reporter's presence) and the former statement he says can just be ignored.

With a committee chairman asking for endorsement of a program, while publicly expressing doubts about the timing of that program, it was small wonder that unanimity collapsed in committee room number one on Thursday.

Ald. Tom Christie sniped at Ald. Percy Frampton while Frampton muttered goodness knows what under this breath. Ald. Clyde Savage chastised the mayor for defeatist talk and the mayor grinned and said "just ignore the press."

Olafson chugged on with his demand that something be done about Garbally Road, Frampton argued for a fire training centre, Savage and Christie wanted a cutback in roads.

It was a rumbling, sometimes sullen debate, sadly in need of a chairman to restore order. (Could that be why council this year is showing a penchant for closed meetings?)

And it was bad because, having come through with a dandy display of confusion and disagreement, the early-beloved elected officials then sighed and handed the whole mess over to city hall staffers to sell.

We wish those staffers luck. And we hope that the property owners in the city are wise enough to see, beyond the scramble for whatever illusory goal politicians aim for, that there is a real need for an orderly plan for development.

It can be delayed but it can't be avoided. And the costs of the programs for roads, sewers, environmental control and fire protection, will never be lower than they are right now.

There's a three-fold appeal here: One to the politicians to sink their personal differences for a month and get behind the budget; One to Mayor Haddock to start providing sound leadership to his council; and one to the public to ignore the city hall scuffle if it continues and vote "yes" April 30.

THAT OLD BLACK MAGIC'S GOT ME . . .

Zambian Space Director Redirects

LUSAKA (AP) — The man who aspired to put Zambian astronauts on the moon has a new cause. He says African witch doctors deserve government support and should be encouraged to take their rightful place beside modern physicians.

Mukuka Nkoloso does not practise witchcraft himself, although he admits having "a mystic vision whenever I ponder the subject."

He is best known as leader of an abortive effort in space. Nkoloso insists that only Zambia's lack of funds allowed the American Apollo 11 astronauts to beat Zambia in the lunar race. The shortage of money hobbled the training of spacemen here five years ago. Nkoloso improvised by rolling would-be astronauts down a hill in oil drums to accustom them to the rigors of space travel.

He is currently acting as President Kenneth Kaunda's personal representative at Liberation Centre, a Lusaka combpound providing offices for various "freedom fighter" movements devoted to overthrowing white rule in southern Africa. Nkoloso recently submitted a report suggesting witchcraft as an antidote to Christianity, which he said has debased Africa's medical skills.

Nkoloso is not appealing on behalf of a dying craft. Millions of space age Africans are involved in that old black magic.

Many whites scoff at witchcraft, but others find it useful.

Ripe tomatoes were regularly filched from the garden of one white expatriate in Lusaka. The man hired a witch doctor to cast a protective spell on the tomato patch and then spread word around the neighborhood that he had done so. The thievery stopped, or so the story goes.

In Rhodesia, white soccer coach Des Lawler lost his job as manager of an African team last year because some of his players preferred the advice of a witch doctor to his coaching. Several Rhodesian soccer clubs employ witchdoctors. A spell on the opposing team costs $14.

Monolithic Vorster Party Pushing S. Africa Unity

By CAROL KENNEDY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

The coming general election in South Africa may signal a final armistice in the lingering hostility between Afrikaner and English-speaking South Africans that has lasted since the Anglo-Boer War of 1899-1902.

But as the two white groups draw closer together, the result could be a weakening of what little opposition now exists to the policy of apartheid for the country's majority black population.

Premier John Vorster called the April 22 election a year early to crush an extreme-right breakaway group with the ruling Nationalist party known as the "verkramptes" — an Afrikaans word meaning "closed minds."

Since the verkramptes are fanatically anti-British and want to establish Afrikaans as the official language instead of the present bilingual status, Vorster is for the first time pitching his campaign on a "national unity" theme aimed directly at wooing the English-speaking voter.

The signs are that the Nationalists will profit handsomely. Already one former opposition United party member from the predominatly-English province of Natal has crossed the floor of Parliament to join the Nationalists.

Traditioally, in South Africa's all-white party system the Nationalists are 90 per cent Afrikaner while the United party with its somewhat watered-down approach to racial separation is divided 50-50 between Boer and Briton. As South Africa has become more isolated in a hostile world, however, the lines have blurred and in the 1966 election Voster's massive majorty owed an estimated one-third of its vote to the English-speaking community.

The Afrikaner-English ratio is about 60-40 in the white population of 4,000,000, which is outnumbered four to one by blacks.

Led by Dr. Albert Hertzog, son of a famous Boer War general, the verkramptes, who call themselves the Reconstituted National party, are fighting for 80 of the 166 parliamentary seats.

Some Promising Steps

A GOOD DEAL OF THE LEGISlation passed at the session which prorogued yesterday appears to be of the "sleeper" variety. Either it will remain in limbo until proclaimed by the government, or it is of a nature whose effects will not be fully discernible until some time in the future. But in keeping with Mr. Bennett's claims that his government is — at long last — becoming interested in people as well as things, there were some progressive and valuable measures which should result in general public approval. Some of them, while acceptable, should be viewed in the light of preliminary steps which will have to be followed by further legislation in order to achieve the maximum benefit.

In the latter category were the amendments to the Pollution Control Act which will restrict backyard burning, regulate sewage systems and in general tighten up control of all sources of pollution. The increasing threat to our environment indicates that much more will have to be done in this field, but British Columbia has at least recognized the problem and stepped up the requirements which must be met by individuals and industries. Allied with these measures are the new litter regulations, covering disposable containers, garbage in parks, and other necessary moves.

Reduction of the legal age from 21 years to 19 may have interesting repercussions. It is difficult to predict the extent to which younger citizens will use their new powers, but the legislation — which will not become effective until the government decrees it—is at least a gesture to the times.

The landlord-and-tenant measure, with its required three-month notice of increased rentals, its freeze on increases for the first year of occupancy, and other safeguards for tenants will, when implemented, create better conditions in this field, although the Greater Victoria area has escaped the excesses seen in some centres.

The government's intentions regarding the long-awaited liquor recommendations are still unknown. Beyond the 19-year age limit for drinkers consequent on the new age of majority, there were no changes during the session. The royal commission's recommendations included sweeping changes in hours and conditions of sale, and made special mention of entertainment, room service, and neighborhood outlets patterned on the traditional English pub. The government has power to implement changes by means of orders-in-council, but remains silent on what it evidently regards as an important moral issue.

Official recognition of the right of arrested persons to make a telephone call merely formalized what has usually been the practice. Film censorship will assume more of an advisory function than one of deletion. Restrictions on foreign ownership of Crown lands, and a new ministerial right to require that a percentage of ore from any mine be smelted within British Columbia, were steps in the right direction.

Much of the legislation, however, awaits proclamation; much of it will mean little unless firmly implemented. As with parks control, for instance, the whole significance depends on the government's use of its powers — and experience has shown that there can be a vast difference between enactment of laws and their proper enforcement.

It was in general a quiet session. There could have been much more fireworks and more controversial policies. Does this suggest a tiring government becoming bogged down in the staggering number of new political problems presented by the growing concern for man's environment and man's life; or a tiring opposition, frustrated by 18 years of struggle against a firmly entrenched political machine; or both?

The Commons Goes Back to Work

AFTER A RECESS FOR Easter, Parliament resumes sitting next Monday and the new discussions promise to be more onerous and heated than those just concluded. Some of the important bills to be debated include the Canada Water Act, the National Parks Act, Canada Corporations Amendments and the Investment Companies Act. Amendments to the Canada Elections Act must be passed by June in order to be implemented in the 1972 election.

In addition to this heavy schedule the government hopes to put through consumer credit legislation to support Mr. Benson's budget measures. And there is speculation, in the wake of the Denison Mines affair, that the government may set up the long-delayed Canada Development Corporation this summer to put into effect the cabinet's policy on foreign ownership. In addition, a joint committee on price stability and a debate on contentious tax reforms will require Commons time. Speed in passing these measures will depend a great deal on the opposition. In the pre-Easter sittings 21 bills were passed in 33 working days, compared with only nine before Christmas. Since most of these bills were house-keeping measures — with the exception of the bill setting motor vehicle safety standards, the Expropriation Act and a few others —the opposition for the most part has been restrained.

But considering the controversial bills in the offing, the temper of the coming debates may be very different from the earlier ones, and could re-open the question of house rules at the expense of pending legislation. While the opposition has every right to question government proposals, at the same time it should not try to bog down the Commons in tedious debates over irrelevant questions. Bills such as the Canada Water Act are of utmost importance to this nation now and deserve full attention of the House. The pre-Easter sitting proved that with reasonable debate Parliament is still a viable and productive, if imperfect, institution. Canadians expect at least as much in the coming weeks.

The Ideology of Clothes

IF CLOTHES MAKE THE MAN, it can also be argued that man makes the clothes to fit his particular ideology. Zoot-suiters, beatniks, hippies . . . now British skinheads are the newest youth life-style. Skinheads shave their hair short, wear baggy work pants with suspenders and are shod with heavy boots. In a sense the clothes articulate their frustration. East London working class youth, in an environment demanding aggressiveness for life's bare necessities, cannot relate to incense burning, oriental philosophies and the pacifism of hippies.

Conversely, hippies sometimes go to unhygenic lengths to dissociate themselves from the conventional molds. And the suit-and-tie syndrome also tends to produce a faceless conformity among the great majority of us. What makes a person put on a philosophy with his mode of dress? Clothes conformity in an age that complains about loss of individuality is paradoxical. Clothes, after all, are a personal thing. But the tyranny of the majority of our friends and colleagues squelches latent Walter Mitty impulses.

Power Towers

With reference to, and on behalf of, the property owners along the proposed route for the overhead power lines:

We wish to protest in no uncertain manner against the hydro pole installation.

It is impossible to visualize the Uplands, Oak Bay or Victoria City agreeing to this method of transmission. Are we in the proposed route district with lesser sensibilities? We think not.

Also to be considered is the devaluation of property as a result of this unsightliness and power leakage on both sides of the line affecting antenna-TV-reception. This, in all probability, will force a change-over to cablevision at no small cost. Coupled with the new power rate such expense will cause a severe hardship for many families living in the vicinity of the overhead lines.

To say that trouble underground would be difficult to find is only an admission of outdated equipment.

As individual letters seem to have more authority than petitions, it is advisable that we all write our local MLA, Dr. Shrum and the finance minister in protest. — Len Skelton, 4068 Grange.

FROM EDMONTON

By JAMES H. GRAY

Insolubles in the Grain Growers' Plight

NOW that the question: "What does Quebec want?" is being less insistently asked a conundrum is taking its place. It is: "What do the Prairie wheat farmers want?"

Gray

Answers to the second question are as hard to come by as were answers to the first. Basically, what they really want is probably some concrete proof that they have not become what the British call "redundant to the economy." They have taken to storming the provincial legislatures in hopes of getting it. But in face of the mountainous surplus of wheat on the prairies, that assurance is proving hard to come by. It is perhaps significant of the seriousness of the problem that the answers they get from provincial politicians are as fuzzy as the reasons for the protests.

What to do about wheat growing is a problem of endless complexity. On one hand the level of farm prices has remained stagnant for a decade while all other prices have been rising. So they need, and have been demanding, a much higher price for their wheat than they have been getting. But how can that be achieved when the world refuses their wheat at the low old prices?

Angry Farmers

The militant farmers have been angry at the Canadian Wheat Board for not selling more wheat. Part of the reason was the Board's hold-out for too high a price. If it had plunged into the international price war it would have brought farm income down to even lower levels, and might not have sold much more wheat.

The fundamental fact with which Canada and the wheat growers seem to be confronted is this:

The farmers of the world have come so close to mastering the art of wheat growing under adverse conditions that they have outstripped world wheat markets. Certainly Canadian farmers are now able to grow more wheat on fewer acres than ever before. So can the Americans, the Australians and, presumably, the Russians. The lessons in soil management Canada learned in the 1930s have spread far and wide. New techniques with new equipment, new chemicals and expanding use of fertilizers have taken much of the uncertainty out of wheat growing.

To accept that thesis leads toward the acceptance of the idea that the wheat growing family farm is redundant. But for the farmers the problem goes even deeper. They by nature regard themselves not as mere economic units but as members of a class that holds our society together. "Where would the world be, where would Canada be, without us?" they cry in despair.

The answer is that Canada and the world is getting along with fewer and fewer farmers all the time. The old-fashioned quarter-section family farm, with its large family and cows, chickens and pigs, has almost ceased to exist in the west. It adds up to a nightmare in which the farmers see their "way of life" disappearing before their eyes.

So in their legislature confrontations they demand some kind of assurance they will not be driven off their farms by the encroachment of corporation farming. Yet is is a fact that thousands of the wheat growers themselves are in all essentials "corporation farmers" for they have moved off their land into nearby towns and commute to their expanded acreage. It is also a fact that king-sized equipment has made it essential to farm king-sized spreads to achieve maximum efficiency.

What are the alternatives to growing wheat? Sadly there are none that can begin to cope with the problem. A recent Alberta estimate was that Canada would have to increase its pork consumption by 20 per cent to absorb the hog feed produced on 1,000,000 acres. Conversion to beef production on a similar scale would produce a whopping red meat surplus.

Limited Market

Vegetables? There was some agitation in Alberta recently because the supermarkets relied on California and Texas growers for their supplies. It turned out that less than 1,000 acres of carrots would supply all the needs of the province, if anybody could be found to do the stoop labor in the fields.

The basic assumption of the agitating wheat growers is that they have a vested right to go on growing wheat regardless. But do wheat farmers have such a right to be kept in business? Then what about butchers, corner grocers, corner garage owners, railway porters and sleeping-car conductors, coal miners, coopers, staymakers, lathers, wheelwrights, telegraphers, tinkers, etc., who have all been nudged into oblivion by a changing world?

Perhaps it is the recognition of historic parallels that is behind the desperate clamor of the radical farm leaders for attention.

Letters to the Editor

Changeth Not

Monday afternoon, my husband and I attended a meeting of the Salvation Army at their convention at the Empress Hotel and were struck by the happy, serene and sincere atmosphere that pervaded. It was an entirely different world. Today with change (and sometimes "decay" in all around I see), even in religion, it was most refreshing to see and listen to people who have not changed through the years; but remain steadfast to their faith and message, and still witness boldly in their most attractive uniform and bonnets. Most inspiring was the music of the young people and others who dedicated their lives at the end of the meeting. Pictures of India showed the work being done there, and the great need for it.

Knowing the Booth family in England, and having heard and read so much of the early days, when the Army had so much to contend with, one is filled with admiration for what has been accomplished and for a people ready at all times to hold out a helping hand, to deal with every type of problem which confronts the world today.— Dorothy Abraham, 1125 Faithful.

Distressing Closure

I am distressed to hear that a private hospital is threatened with closure. In the present age when the elderly are pushed down at every turn of the road it is deplorable that this home should not be kept open. — Miss Audrey M. Goodchild, RN, 2204 Cadboro Bay Rd.

FROM UNITED NATIONS, N.Y.

By WILLIAM R. FRYE

Former Enemies, Now Friends, Helping the West

ONE of Secretary-General U Thant's favorite aphorisms is that a nation has no permanent friends and no permanent enemies — only permanent interests. UN people pondered that truism this past week. From Cambodia to West Germany, and from Italy to Japan, former adversaries of the United States were helping — each in its own way — to wage the cold war. Two former friends — the Soviet Union and China — meanwhile were making trouble from Cairo to Vientiane,

Frye

Bonn and Tokyo are formidable allies. They were themselves the first and most important prizes of the cold war.

The West won half of Germany and all of Japan; and it is now reaping the benefits.

From prostrate beggars in 1945, Germany and Japan have been transformed into economic superpowers in 1970. By any standard of measurement — gross national product, per capita income, growth rate, trade, amount of foreign aid — they are giants, fully in the ball park with the United States and the Soviet Union.

Bonn Reaching Out

West Germany is on the diplomatic offensive. It is reaching behind the Iron Curtain for influence — and getting a response.

Within Western Europe, West Germany is already a dominating economic power, It was no accident that it was the German mark that was revalued (upward) last year and the French franc that was devalued. Nor is it surprising that Bonn should be a major influence in advancing British membership in the Common Market.

Only the absence of nuclear weapons prevents West Germany from being a full-fledged superpower.

The fact that this strength is being used on the side of the free world is cause for great satisfaction. Not all of the West's policies since 1945 have gone awry. Sponsorship of West Germany's recovery, and establishment of a military alliance with her, have paid off handsomely, and are still doing so.

Cultivation of Japan can do equally well — and, indeed, better, since Japan is not partitioned. The West is well on the way toward making an ally of Japan. She is strongly inclined toward the free world.

The return of Okinawa, negotiated last year, has cleared the decks for a more complete Japanese-American alignment. Okinawa was a major obstacle to co-operation. Some diplomats believe the pact providing for its return may prove to be the single most important agreement the United States made in 1969.

Trading policies, on both sides, could be irritants, if permitted to fester. Demonstrators in the United States intermittently demand more restrictive tariffs. To levy them would be cruelly shortsighted, in direct conflict with the American national interest.

Japan's political influence in Asia is potentially as great as that of West Germany in Europe. In some places, memories of her World War II occupation linger; but nearly everywhere — even in South Korea, which was as bitter as any — Japan now is an acceptable, and often a welcome colleague.

Drawing China Out

Japan and Germany could be, and to some extent have been, factors in drawing China out of her bamboo fortress. The lure of trade pulls China toward them, and them toward China.

It will be of great importance to Asia, as the United States disengages from its deeper commitments there, if Japan can step in, in all but military ways, to fill the vacuum.

Trade and economic aid are key elements in a country's political stability, and Asia's poor can receive both from Japan. Indeed, Japan has begun to provide them in larger quantities than the United States. Over-all, in Asia, Japanese foreign aid has outdistanced American.

Japan can help close Asia's door to the Soviet Union, which is manoeuvring to step in when and as the United States leaves. She can also pre-empt China, if and when Peking resumes an active external role.

There is good reason for satisfaction in the West that Japan and West Germany are on the right side. The only reversal which could have greater effect on the world balance of power would be one by the Soviet Union itself.

Nature Rambles

By FREEMAN KING

It is beautiful at John Dean Park, off the West Road. This park is situated on Mt. Newton.

As you drive along the road you will now see dogwoods in bloom. On the same twig you will find some blossoms with four sepals and some with five. Some are even showing six. Do you know that the white is not the flower? The yellow-greenish tiny bud-like knobs are the true blossoms and in the fall they will turn to scarlet.

As you go up the hill the salmon berry's pink blooms alongside the road make a wonderful showing. Close by is the thimbleberry shrub with its tall stem and the white bud clusters are now breaking out.

There are many flowering currants now along the way, breaking the monotony of the greens.

Just as you get to the park entrance, by the stone pillars, there are a few Easter lilies in bloom. They are later than those close to Victoria.

Down in the little valley are hundreds of trilliums in white blossom. Some of the plants are over a foot in height and three to four inches across the flower.

Growing in this park is a small clump of pink Easter lilies. (Erythronium smithii). This species is not common in this area.

Where the old cabin of the late Mr. Dean stood, the ground has become covered with English ivy. No doubt introduced also, are two very large holly trees close by. The clearing is now becoming covered with the new forest growth.

Go down by the picnic grounds and there you will see something that is quite rare—a quantity of young western yew trees all growing within a small space. They are close to the very old Douglas fir that Mr. Dean called His Majesty.

When you come to the little man-made lake you will see a number of young dogwood trees. These have come in since the lake was made.

By the old rock wall there are several soopolallie shrubs. On the underside of the egg-shaped leaves you may see a silver-rusty covering of hairs. This shrub has the male and female flowers on separate plants. In the fall they will have small, almost transparent reddish berries.

As you go around the lake, look into the small swamp to see the clumps of skunk cabbage that are now showing their beautiful golden yellow sheaths.

In the shallow water you will see a number of little salamanders waiting for food to move in close.

As you walk up along the trail, notice the new leaves of the vanilla leaf on their long slender stems. Close by will be the little whorl of heavily veined leaves of the star flower.

Growing among the moss futher along there are many shy little yellow violets.

Now is the time to see the fiddleheads of the bracken fern. These are good to eat and taste something like asparagus.

Hope Held for Canadian Broadcasting

By ROBERT FULFORD
Saturday Night

For decades everyone had been saying that the Canadian broadcasting system should be Canadian.

Sir John Aird, the head of the first royal commission on broadcasting, said it in 1929. The Massey Commission said it in 1951. The Fowler Commission said it in 1957.

Every parliamentary committee that so much as glanced at the situation said it, again and again. And yet through all those years the Canadian broadcasting system grew more and more American.

The CBC may have been dominated by Canadian programs in the radio days, but when TV came along, its English-language network, nearly drowned in Hollywood-produced programs on film.

The private TV stations, for their part, made little more than a few gestures toward Canadian programming, and the private radio stations hardly did that.

Consider Criticism

And then, on February 12, 1970, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission announced that this period was at an end.

It proposed that in the future both the CBC and the private TV stations be forced to devote sixty per cent of their prime evening time to Canadian programs; and that radio stations, for their part, be required to devote thirty per cent of their time to Canadian music.

The chairman of the commission, Pierre Juneau — who with this announcement obviously became the most important single figure in Canadian mass culture — said that the CRTC would consider criticism of this proposal. It would listen to argument; the proposals were not "rigid"; but they were "firm."

The implications were enormous. Juneau was saying that he planned to order various Canadian institutions to do what everyone had always said they should do.

It was as if a government body dealing with air pollution had actually told the private industries of Canada to stop polluting the air; or as if some federal authority were to say that the auto makers had to figure out some way to make safe cars, whether they felt like it or not. Juneau was suggesting no less than this: that what we had all said should be done actually could be done and would be done.

Some of us felt, in the 1950s and the early 1960s, that the whole idea of Canadian content, measured by percentages, was pretty silly.

One good Canadian program, we argued, would probably be worth more than six bad ones; so why measure in hours?

We knew — those of us, at least, who followed rather uneasily the deliberations of the Board of Broadcast Governors — that those administering the system had shown no real evidence of knowing the difference between good and bad in broadcasting.

Indeed, they seldom indicated that they cared how the broadcasters filled their quota, so long as the percentages came out right.

And indeed, the harshest critics of the BBG's Canadian content policy were proved correct. The private TV stations provided Canadian content, all right, but as those critics predicted it was usually the worst sort of junk.

Lead by Amateurs

Cheap talk shows and game shows, for instance, usually shoved into the hours with the smallest audiences.

The BBG, in ruling broadcasting from 1958 to 1968, was in no position to encourage a better situation. At its head were amateurs of broadcasting, who knew little about programming and believed that when they announced percentage goals their most serious work was done.

The CRTC is in a radically different situation. The commission itself is manned partly by experienced broadcasters; moreover, it has hired some of the best broadcasters Canada has produced — Sydney Newman, the drama producer, is the most distinguished of them — as advisers and consultants.

Since it began to operate it has looked deeply into every aspect of broadcasting, from finance to programming. When the CRTC meets a broadcaster it meets him on terms of professional equality. It offers not empty rhetoric but opinions based on detailed facts.

Thus its decision to demand more Canadian programs in prime time comes out of a study of the details of broadcasting in various parts of this country. The CRTC of course knows what every Canadian set owner knows: that our broadcasting stations are heavily Americanized.

But it also believes it knows something else: that things don't have to be this way, that when you study the economics you discover that the stations, on demand, can perform much better.

The proposal to force broadcasters to schedule Canadian programs in prime time was answered by some of them — the head of CTV, for instance — with the warning that this might mean a dilution of quality.

It seems to me to be calculated to produce the opposite effect. If Canadian programs must be seen when audiences are at their greatest — and thus the potential of commercial revenue at its highest — then broadcasters will be much more likely to provide programs of quality.

The announcement of the new proposals in February came as a shock to many people both inside and outside broadcasting. It shouldn't have.

Since Juneau and his fellow commissioners began making their first decisions, more than a year ago, they have been demonstrating that they take their work much more seriously than most regulatory agencies.

When they cancelled one small station's licence for failing to provide a service to the community, they began to hint at what was to come. After all, the Federal Communications Commission in the United States, in the course of some four decades, had never seen fit to take such an obvious step.

(Editor's Note: Licences of three more radio stations were lifted last week for similar lack of service.)

No Free Ride

But when they announced their policy on cable TV they began to make broadcasting history. Cable TV, the CRTC told us, was not to have a free ride on the back of broadcasting.

Cable operators were expected to create their own programs and put back into their communities some of the money they were taking out.

Immediately the commissioners changed the status of cable TV from yet another licence-to-print-money (in Lord Thomson's famous phrase) to the status of a public utility with public responsibilities.

About the same time, the CRTC began to make it clear that it believed broadcasting stations should be owned in their communities and should reflect the needs of their communities.

None of this, it was obvious from the beginning, would come easily. Juneau and the others had set out, clearly, to change the face of broadcasting in Canada.

To change it from American-dominated to Canadian-dominated. To convert its private sector from irresponsibility to responsibility. To make it not simply a reflection of whatever social and commercial winds blow in the country but a creative contributor to Canada as a whole.

The commissioners must have known from the beginning they were attempting something close to the impossible.

In a field demoralized on the one hand by a gone-to-seed public corporation, and corrupted on the other by the deadest sort of commercialism, they were calling for hope, optimism, and national ambition on the grand scale.

In the middle of a dull, anxious winter, the February announcements of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission were a remarkable sign of life. The idea of Canadian broadcasting, it turned out, wasn't dead yet.

Smugness, Prejudice Must Go If Canada to Hold Together

By SOLANGE CHAPUT ROLLAND
Toronto Daily Star

(Montreal author and political commentator whose books include Dear Enemies, My Country—Quebec or Canada?)

MONTREAL — Before a French-speaking Canadian can be a social success today in an English milieu, he must obey these few rules:

1. He should talk in a scandalized way about the Saint Leonard school crisis in Montreal, but he should never mention the thousands of Saint Leonards outside Quebec where French Canadians have been denied their own schools.

2. He should praise Premier Bertrand for having maintained, through Bill 63, the language rights of the English minority in Quebec, but he should never observe that if English-speaking Quebecers had done us the courtesy of learning a bit of French 100 years ago, unilingualism would never have become a crucial issue in Quebec.

3. He must never criticize Prime Minister Trudeau's constitutional policy, because if he does he will be looked upon as a disguised separatist.

Beneath these flippant remarks lies a great deal of truth. But inasmuch as one honestly deplores the two solitudes—not between French and English Canada but between les Quebecois pro-Levesque et Quebecois, pro-Trudeau—one must examine ready-made ideas about Quebec nationalism.

The Trudeau phenomenon, which started in Toronto and will probably end in Toronto, is a good example of real misunderstanding between Canadians. Seldom in the history of this country has such a good man been elected for such wrong reasons.

During the mass hysteria of the election, as I listened to the wild enthusiasm with which Trudeau was presented to the Canadian people as "the man who would put Quebec in its place," I wondered if English-speaking politicians and political commentators had any idea how we felt about it in Quebec.

It has become the fashion nowadays to deny the fact, but anyone who followed Trudeau's campaign closely knows why so much enthusiastic attention was showered upon such an unknown man: Every time a Quebecer tried during those exciting days to throw a little cold water on the Liberal fires, he was depicted as a Trudeau hater, an anti-Canadian, a Levesque spy.

Quebec has not yet been silenced, but our province is now divided, sick and on the brink of civil war. Of course Trudeau is not responsible for our provincial chaos, but the undercurrent of a campaign based on putting Quebec in its place has had a devastating effect on most of us, on the millions of us who voted for Trudeau despite our fear of his constitutional position toward Quebec.

We are not a people devoted only to our own future or involved only in our own special problems. Most of us love Canada and have its interests at heart. Trudeau appeared to be the man for Canada, so in spite of our fear that Quebec would be more alone after his victory we voted for him.

But the consequences of his election are still being felt in Quebec. We are now like wolves biting each other.

Some of us are exasperated by the silent majority's desire to remain in a confederation whose most ardent supporters have hardly disguised their ambition to finish once and for all with Quebec's perpetual demands.

Others are impatient to proclaim a sovereignty for which, I am sure, they know Quebec is definitely not ready.

The angry and hungry young generation is fed up with its elders, who serenely believe that Quebec has not changed, that separatism is the toy of an unimportant and very small minority, and with a French-English Establishment which appears to be ready to pay anyone and any price to maintain its comfortable privileges in Quebec.

These are dangerous emotions, but if we have the courage to face up to them without searching for scapegoats in Cuba, in Ottawa or elsewhere, the whole country may learn a great deal from Quebec's agony.

CHAPUT-ROLLAND

As a French Canadian who for more than 20 years has involved herself in our French society, I am torn apart by what I see and hear today in Quebec—and in other provinces.

Last July 1 the Prime Minister commented that "tolerance was a Canadian virtue." I was astounded. I wonder if the Indians, the Eskimos, the Acadians, the black Canadians, the Protestants, the Catholics, the Company of Young Canadians, feel that our history is a model of tolerance.

If we are to live in the '70s with the same prejudices, the same smugness and the same misconceptions of history we have lived with in the '60s, then I fear that—whether Quebec leaves or stays in Canada—our country will be made cruelly aware of its numerous unjust societies.

The future of Canada depends very much on the future of Quebec. But national unity does not rest only on bilingualism or biculturalism; it will draw its vitality from the sincerity of our search for un vertible humanisme Canadien.

Get a University Degree In Your Own Living Room

By BARRY TURNER

LONDON — Twenty-five thousand students who have been unable to gain places in residential universities in Britain will soon be able to take degree courses by watching television and listening to the radio.

It is all part of the service provided by the Open University, which will cater for those who are already in full-time employment but want to study for a degree at home in their spare time.

The teaching program based on radio and television broadcasts by the British Broadcasting Corporation, correspondence courses, and short residential summer schools, is due to start in January 1971.

The academic staff are already installed in their headquarters — a converted country mansion in Buckinghamshire — and are preparing the new courses and sorting out the first candidates for admission.

There are no formal entrance requirements and anyone over the age of 21 can apply. But the university is hoping to appeal to those of proved ability who nevertheless failed to gain a place in one of Britain's overcrowded residential universities.

So far, about 90 per cent of the applications have come from men. This is something of a surprise to the university, since women have been far more deprived of conventional higher education.

Of the total applications received nearly half are from teachers, which may reflect not so much a disinterested desire for advanced learning, but more a certain knowledge that an honors degree is worth a $600 addition to their annual salary.

To date, little interest has been aroused among those in working-class jobs, and Dr. Walter Perry, Vice-Chancellor of the Open University, has had to answer the criticism that he is creating a socially biased institution.

Recently, he told a press conference: "It may take some time for the average man to realize that this is an opportunity for him but we are making special efforts through the trades unions to inform as many of their members as possible."

An Open University student will certainly have to work hard for his degree. It is estimated he will need to spend a minimum of 10 hours of his spare time each week on every course he takes. (Initially, he has a choice of science, mathematics, the humanities and "understanding society," but after 1972 technology and education studies will also be offered.)

He can take up to two courses a year and will be awarded a credit for each course he successfully completed. Six credits will be rewarded with a Bachelor of Arts ordinary degree. A BA with Honors will require eight credits. This means that the majority of students will need to spend four or five years on their university work, which will cost them from $360 to $540.

The government's contribution to the Open University is still an unknown factor, but official forecasts of an annual bill of about $20 million are thought to be far too optimistic. For instance, there will almost certainly be pressure on the government to improve television coverage.

Over half the homes in the country do not receive BBC 2, the channel on which the university programs will be transmitted. Yet the BBC is already short of money and has no hope of rapidly expanding services without government assistance.

Then there are incidental costs at a local level. Town councils have expressed concern about having to provide extra library space and money for additional books.

The Labour government is committed to the Open University, but academic and political opponents of the scheme, who regard degrees by television as an educational gimmick, point out that the Conservative Opposition has so far refused to guarantee the University's running costs.

If there is a change of government at the next election, due to be held within the next year, the Open University might be stifled at birth.

Before Modern Improvement

By ART STOTT

The old picture postcards show Victoria's Inner Harbor photographed from a vantage point which brought out the lawns and architecture of the Legislative Buildings and the Empress Hotel, with an immaculate CPR ticket office and waiting room backgrounding trim CPR ferries at the docks, black hulls gleaming beneath clean white superstructures and yellow stacks. A few yachts and small boats rode in repose at moorings in the basin.

Stott

The view was selective. In an earlier era, the Inner Harbor wasn't all that elegant if you looked at it closely and from a different angle. Housekeeping in some areas was a little untidy and not all the buildings around the basin shared the stately grandeur of those in the conventional picture.

It may be well to remember this as we discuss now the harbor improvements over which there is no unanimity of opinion. One thing we should avoid — mention of any "pristine, unsullied beauty". A fair amount of the construction wasn't pristine, some areas weren't unsullied.

As you came in from the Outer Wharf on one of the "Princess" boats, you passed the old Chemical Works, where powdered sulphur mingled with the evidence of structural decay after the plant shut down. You moved on around the Bapco Paint Company, which was naturally kept painted, but was surrounded by sheds and wharf structures that showed the ravages of time. If you happened to be aboard one of the black-stacked GTP (later red-white-and-blue-stacked CNR) "Princes", you moved to the north side of the harbor which wasn't exactly as beautiful as a well-kept garden.

Since these earlier days, almost every change in the Inner Harbor has been an improvement, with the dubious exception of a gas station on land that might better have been used for a more distinctively attractive building.

Still, it was our front door — our only door other than the terminal of the E & N which debouched into Victoria's red light district in all its slatternly shabbiness. And as our front door, we loved it, even elements that were something less than beautiful.

It was before my time, but my parents have told me of an earlier day when Indians on the Causeway sold fresh salmon for two prices only — fifteen cents for a small one, two-bits for a large. It was before my time, but old timers have told me about the bridge that spanned the mudflats, leading to the Bird Cages, with the Belmont and the Brown Jug at the north end ranking among the most popular saloons of a multi-barred town.

My memories go back no further than the days of the old James Bay Athletic Association clubhouse hanging over the water where the freight and parking wharf of the CPR stands in front of the present waiting room. It made no bow to elegance, but the clubhouse, with shells housed underneath, was a pulsing centre of athletic life here. From it Bill Locke, John Locke, Billy Kennedy, Dan Moses, Ray Ditchburn and a multitude of others, launched their galleys to be cussed up and down the Gorge by Dan O'Sullivan, a coach revered by the oarsmen on whom he, ordinarily a quietly spoken man, laid the verbal whip from the cockpit of the club's speedboat "Bluebird".

In recollection the small boathouse floats again at the opposite side of the basin. There Big Andy used to rent a canoe for the trip up the Gorge on picnics, paddling my sister and me for a day's outing. Rental was a dollar for the day and from one of the canoes we saw Duke Kahanamoku, the greatest sprint swimmer of his time, perform in the Elks outdoor log-enclosed pool below the present site of the Gorge Hotel.

We started and in later years finished, our Times-Through-Victoria three-mile swim from the float in front of the Causeway, with Tommy Wellburn engaged in annual duels against Audrey Griffin and almost invariably swimming the last mile or three-quarters with cramped legs.

We watched Bill Nye, whose long hair, "unusual" clothes and apparent aversion to razors and soap and water seem to have predicted a more modern trend in appearance, row the half barrel that was his boat around the harbor, picking up flotsam and jetsam.

We gathered for May 24 fireworks there. Some of us made the transfer from the old VASC Gorge pool to compete in the Christmas Day swim in the harbor — through water they didn't call polluted then, though you came out gummy and not smelling like roses when the tide was relatively low.

Many of the old institutions, old personalities and old events have left the harbor scene and the surge is to further improvement. But the memories are still cherished of days when our aesthetic appreciation was less refined than it is now.

Anti-Marijuana Resolution Scored as Cheap Politics

The government called it a vote against marijuana and the opposition called it "cheap politics" as MLAs got all 'hung up" on drugs in th legislature Thursday.

By a 35-17 vote the government passed a resolution expressing "concern" over statements about marijuana attributed to federal Health Minister John Munro in January.

Munro was quoted at the time as saying it would be irresponsible to continue outlawing marijuana if studies showed a significant minority of Canadians using it.

Minister Without Portfolio Grace McCarthy who placed the resolution before the House said there is too much encouragement for drug experimentation by young people.

Opposition Leader Dave Barrett said he wanted to make clear he is against the use of marijuana but described the resolution as "cheap politics."

Liberal Leader Pat McGeer told the House Munro had described the reports of his marijuana comments as inaccurate in a telegram to McGeer shortly after the incident and had publicly denied this.

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark, an avowed opponent of drugs and alcohol too, said it doesn't matter whether Munro said it, the important thing is to make clear what the legislature thinks about drugs.

Speaker William Murray interrupted to say it is indeed important whether Munro said it because the resolution was based on statements attributed to him.

Garde Gardom (L—Vancouver-Point Grey) said he "admired" Mrs. McCarthy's attitude to marijuana but he couldn't accept a resolution based on "third-rate hearsay."

Ernie LeCours (SC—Richmond) indicated he agreed with the opposition but absented himself from the legislature when it came time to vote. He was "paired" with Barrie Clark (L—North Vancouver-Seymour) who missed the last three days of the session because he is in Mexico.

Dudley Little (SC—Skeena) voted with the opposition against the resolution.

Gordon Dowding (NDP—Burnaby-Edmonds) warned the legislature it would be in effect libelling Munro by passing a resolution containing statements not proved to have been made by the federal minister.

'Slap Wrists' of Pushers Not Federal Minister Opposition Tells McCarthy

Premier Bennett, anxious to move the business of the House quickly along to a conclusion, sat through the first part of the debate looking interested and occasionally banging his desk in support of anti-drug statements, but later left the House as the debate wore on.

Barrett said he agreed with Mrs. McCarthy that more research must be done into the effects of marijuana but the lack of provincial government initiative in such research was proof that the resolution was purely political, he said.

Barrett said it is wrong to "slap the wrists" of a federal minister without adequate evidence, but even more wrong in view of the real targets for action — organized crime.

"Corporations like Benguet, the Grand Bahama Port Authority and the Mafia are the ones whose wrists should be slapped," he said, referring generally to the link between organized crime and drug-pushers.

Loffmark attacked the use of marijuana, barbiturates, amphetamines and other drugs as "deadly enemies" of society and young people in particular.

"My personal view is that there is very little difference between the debilitating hazards of marijuana and alcohol," he said, suggesting that if the use of alcohol were just now beginning to take hold in society instead of being a long-standing practice, it should be fought as hard as marijuana is being fought.

"Young people say to adults that if marijuana is bad, why don't you stop drinking alcohol? . . . We have no answer for them," Loffmark said.

The legislature should make clear there is "no room for equivocation" on the subject of drugs, he said.

Murray intervened at a few intervals to caution members against leaving the impression that the resolution was worded in such a way as to be a condemnation of Munro. It was no such thing, he said.

The government appeared to be in the process of drafting a new resolution which might meet unanimous approval of the House when the New Democrats called for a vote on the original resolution to bring the debate to a close.

Mrs. McCarthy read a letter from American television personality Art Linkletter in support of her stand. He has been an anti-drug campaigner since the death of his daughter last year in a drug-related incident.

As the vote was being taken, Barrett called over to the government benches, "You've slandered a federal minister."

Earlier a private member's bill introduced by Barrett calling for the establishment of an inquiry board to look into the availability of illegal drugs such as heroin, marijuana and LSD was ruled out of order on the grounds that it would involve the expenditure of public funds.

Barrett criticized persons who take rigid and extreme positions either for or against the use of drugs, adding that such stances would not result in solutions to the drug abuse. A committee could get on with the job and end the "hysteria" of some politicians, he said.

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson said that there was no doubt in his mind that the drugs should not be legalized. The kind of statements made by Barrett hurt, he added. Peterson said the problem of illegal drug use was national in scope, and the report of the federal government's Le Dain Royal Commission should be studied before action is taken.

COBURN CASE SENT BACK

Judge Montague Drake acted on "a wrong principle" when he held that market value alone is the measure of compensation payable for property expropriated by Victoria city council.

This is the judgment of Mr. Justice Craig Munroe of the B.C. Supreme Court in reference to an appeal by Victoria lawyer Dermod Owen-Flood against an award of $11,100 to William Coburn by Judge Drake.

Coburn asked $17,500 after his home at 2640 Blanshard was expropriated by city council last February.

CLAIM REJECTED

This claim was rejected last December by Judge Drake, appointed administrator under the Municipal Act. He accepted an expert's appraisal of $11,100 as the true value of the Coburn's house.

Owen-Flood challenged Judge Drake's ruling on the ground that market value was not enough.

"There are many other considerations, such as the cost of living and rising costs of materials to be taken into account," counsel said.

Mr. Justice Craig Munroe agreed with Owen-Flood to the extent that he directed the case be referred back to Judge Drake for re-consideration.

'WRONG PRINCIPLE'

"Since the learned arbitrator (Judge Drake) said that he measured the compensation which he awarded by a determination of the market value alone — that is without regard to other considerations which might affect the value of the property — I am of the opinion that he awarded compensation on a wrong principle."

Mr. Justice Munroe asked Judge Drake to reconsider the value of the property in the light of this opinion.

He made no order as to costs.

The Coburn's house at 2640 Blanshard was expropriated by the city on February 1969.

It was the last house in this area to be torn down to make way for the Rose-Blanshard urban renewal project.

BRANDISHED RIFLES

After a dispute with the city over the value of the house, the Coburns defied an eviction order Feb. 1, 1969. They refused to leave the house and brandished rifles when city officials tried to break in.

They moved out a month later when the city made a final offer of $12,500, but it was on condition that the Coburns could appeal in County Court for a higher price.

Judge Drake was appointed arbitrator under the Municipal Act to hear the appeal.

The case has now been referred back to him.

THIRTEEN FAIL

Private Bills Don't Pass

Thirteen of twenty private members' bills on the order paper of the legislature were briefly considered Friday by the assembly, and, as usual, none were passed.

Private bills are generally given low priority in the legislature and rarely is one accepted by the government.

Seven of the bills were ruled out of order, three were adjourned by government ministers at second reading, two were defeated, and one was withdrawn.

ADJOURNS BILL

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson adjourned a bill introduced by Garde Gardom (Lib.—Vancouver-Point Grey) that would have made the annual report of the Inspector of Trust Companies available to the legislature, rather than just to the finance minister and the attorney-general.

Peterson also adjourned discussion on a bill introduced by Gardom that would make the Law Reform Commission answerable to the legislature "rather than just to the attorney-general."

Two separate bills that would have raised the hourly minimum wage for men and women to $2 were ruled out of order, though the opposition unsuccessfully challenged the speaker's ruling.

A bill that would have increased the annual holidays for employees from two to three weeks was ruled out of order. The bill was introduced by Leo Nimsick (NDP—Kootenay).

Gardom's bill that would have given citizens of B.C. the right to sue the government was also ruled out of order.

A bill calling for a $1-a-ton royalty on coal shipped from B.C. was ruled out of order after Opposition Leader Dave Barrett spoke briefly in support of his proposal which he said would raise $18 million a year for the government from an undertaxed resource.

INCREASINGLY STRONG PERFORMANCE

Barrett Proves Capable Leading NDP

By VIC PARSONS

While MLAs on all sides of the legislature sat in judgment, new NDP house leader Dave Barrett had to prove that he was the right man for the job of party leader during the 1970 session.

Barrett, unexpectedly placed in the role of effective party leader following the August election, reacted to the pressure by showing any doubters an increasingly strong performance toward the end of the ten-week sitting.

His stint as parliamentary leader of the 12-member NDP group has probably made the MLA for Coquitlam a shoo-in for the top party job in B.C. when the New Democrats meet at Chilliwack in June to pick a replacement for unseated party chieft Tom Berger.

Caucus Unanimous

The fact that the parliamentary caucus of the NDP Friday unanimously endorsed Barrett as their choice for party leader, is ample proof that the 39-year old social worker has satisfied the official opposition MLAs with his performance this session.

Barrett had earlier won the support of two prominent members of the caucus — Robert Williams, MLA for Vancouver East, and former opposition leader Robert Strachan. When Berger was chosen NDP chief over Barrett last spring, Williams finished last in the three-way race for the leadership. And Strachan was at that time a Williams supporter.

Now the other member for Vancouver East, Alex Macdonald, himself considered as a potential candidate for the party leadership, has expressed his support for Barrett.

With no other challengers to Barrett yet in the contest, the house leader is far ahead of others who might enter as would-be tortoises to the Barrett hare.

Whether Barrett would be the next leader of the opposition party was not so clear at the beginning of the session.

Government backbenchers taunted the NDP members with queries about the identity of the "real leader" of the party, and referred to the NDP's "Diefenbaker", likening Strachan to the former prime minister and Barrett to Robert Stanfield, the Nova Scotian national PC leader.

Overcame Ghost

Barrett has in fact had to overcome his own ghost of sessions-past — the Scots-born former leader of the opposition who served in that capacity for 13 years. But as the session proceeded, Strachan less and less assumed the role as leader and Barrett gradually began to fill it.

Certainly Strachan maintained his role as a well-prepared, vocal MLA and could always be counted on to give a rousing performance, and confessed that he still felt the urge to rise and speak on every subject.

And when the name-calling began, it was often between Strachan and Premier Bennett. "I'm the lighting rod," Strachan said once," Bennett attacks me as a Pavlovian reaction."

Barrett's relationship to the premier this session has been noticeably more polite.

Strachan, who says he moved two seats away from Barrett at his own insistence, felt thatt he house leader's performance was "getting much better . . . He has to handle things on his own and get himself outo f problems."

New Man Held Own

Though Barrett sometimes took a back seat to other NDP members on various subjects — for example, to Williams on lands and resources and to Gordon Dowding on the intricate question of the West Vancouver Cypress Bowl recreational project — he usually more than held his own.

He is best understandable, on human problems. When these subjects arise he fires his comments with confidence at the government benches, perpetrating his brand of humour — sometimes sarcastic, sometimes gentle—on them, blasting what he considers inefficiency and waste of human and monetary resources. His remarks are to the point, his questions incisive, his knowledge and experience useful.

Viewed by many government MLAs as a ham actor, he nevertheless is acquiring an ability to a stirring and believable performance at times, and is improving on those issues where he was weak.

Now, with a session as party leader under his belt, and the affirmed support of several influential MLAs, Barrett looks like the sure choice for the NDP leadership.

When he made his opening address in the legislature this year, Barrett said a reporter had called his home and asked for "the house leader". One of his children aswering the phone asked the newsman to wait while the youngster called his mother.

Apparently Barrett has come a long way since then to be recognized as a leader.

Parolees Praised For Record

HALIFAX (CP) — The Canadian parole system is one of the best tools there is for rehabilitating criminals, says John Arnott, director of the John Howard Society here.

"It's a fact that 90 per cent of parolees do not go back to jail during their parole term," he said, adding that 60 per cent of ex-convicts who had been paroled were still without further convictions five years later.

Arnott was commenting on a recent statement by former Winnipeg police chief George Blow that the parole board's leniency is breeding crime in Canada. Chief Blow said the ease with which paroles could be obtained encouraged younger criminals.

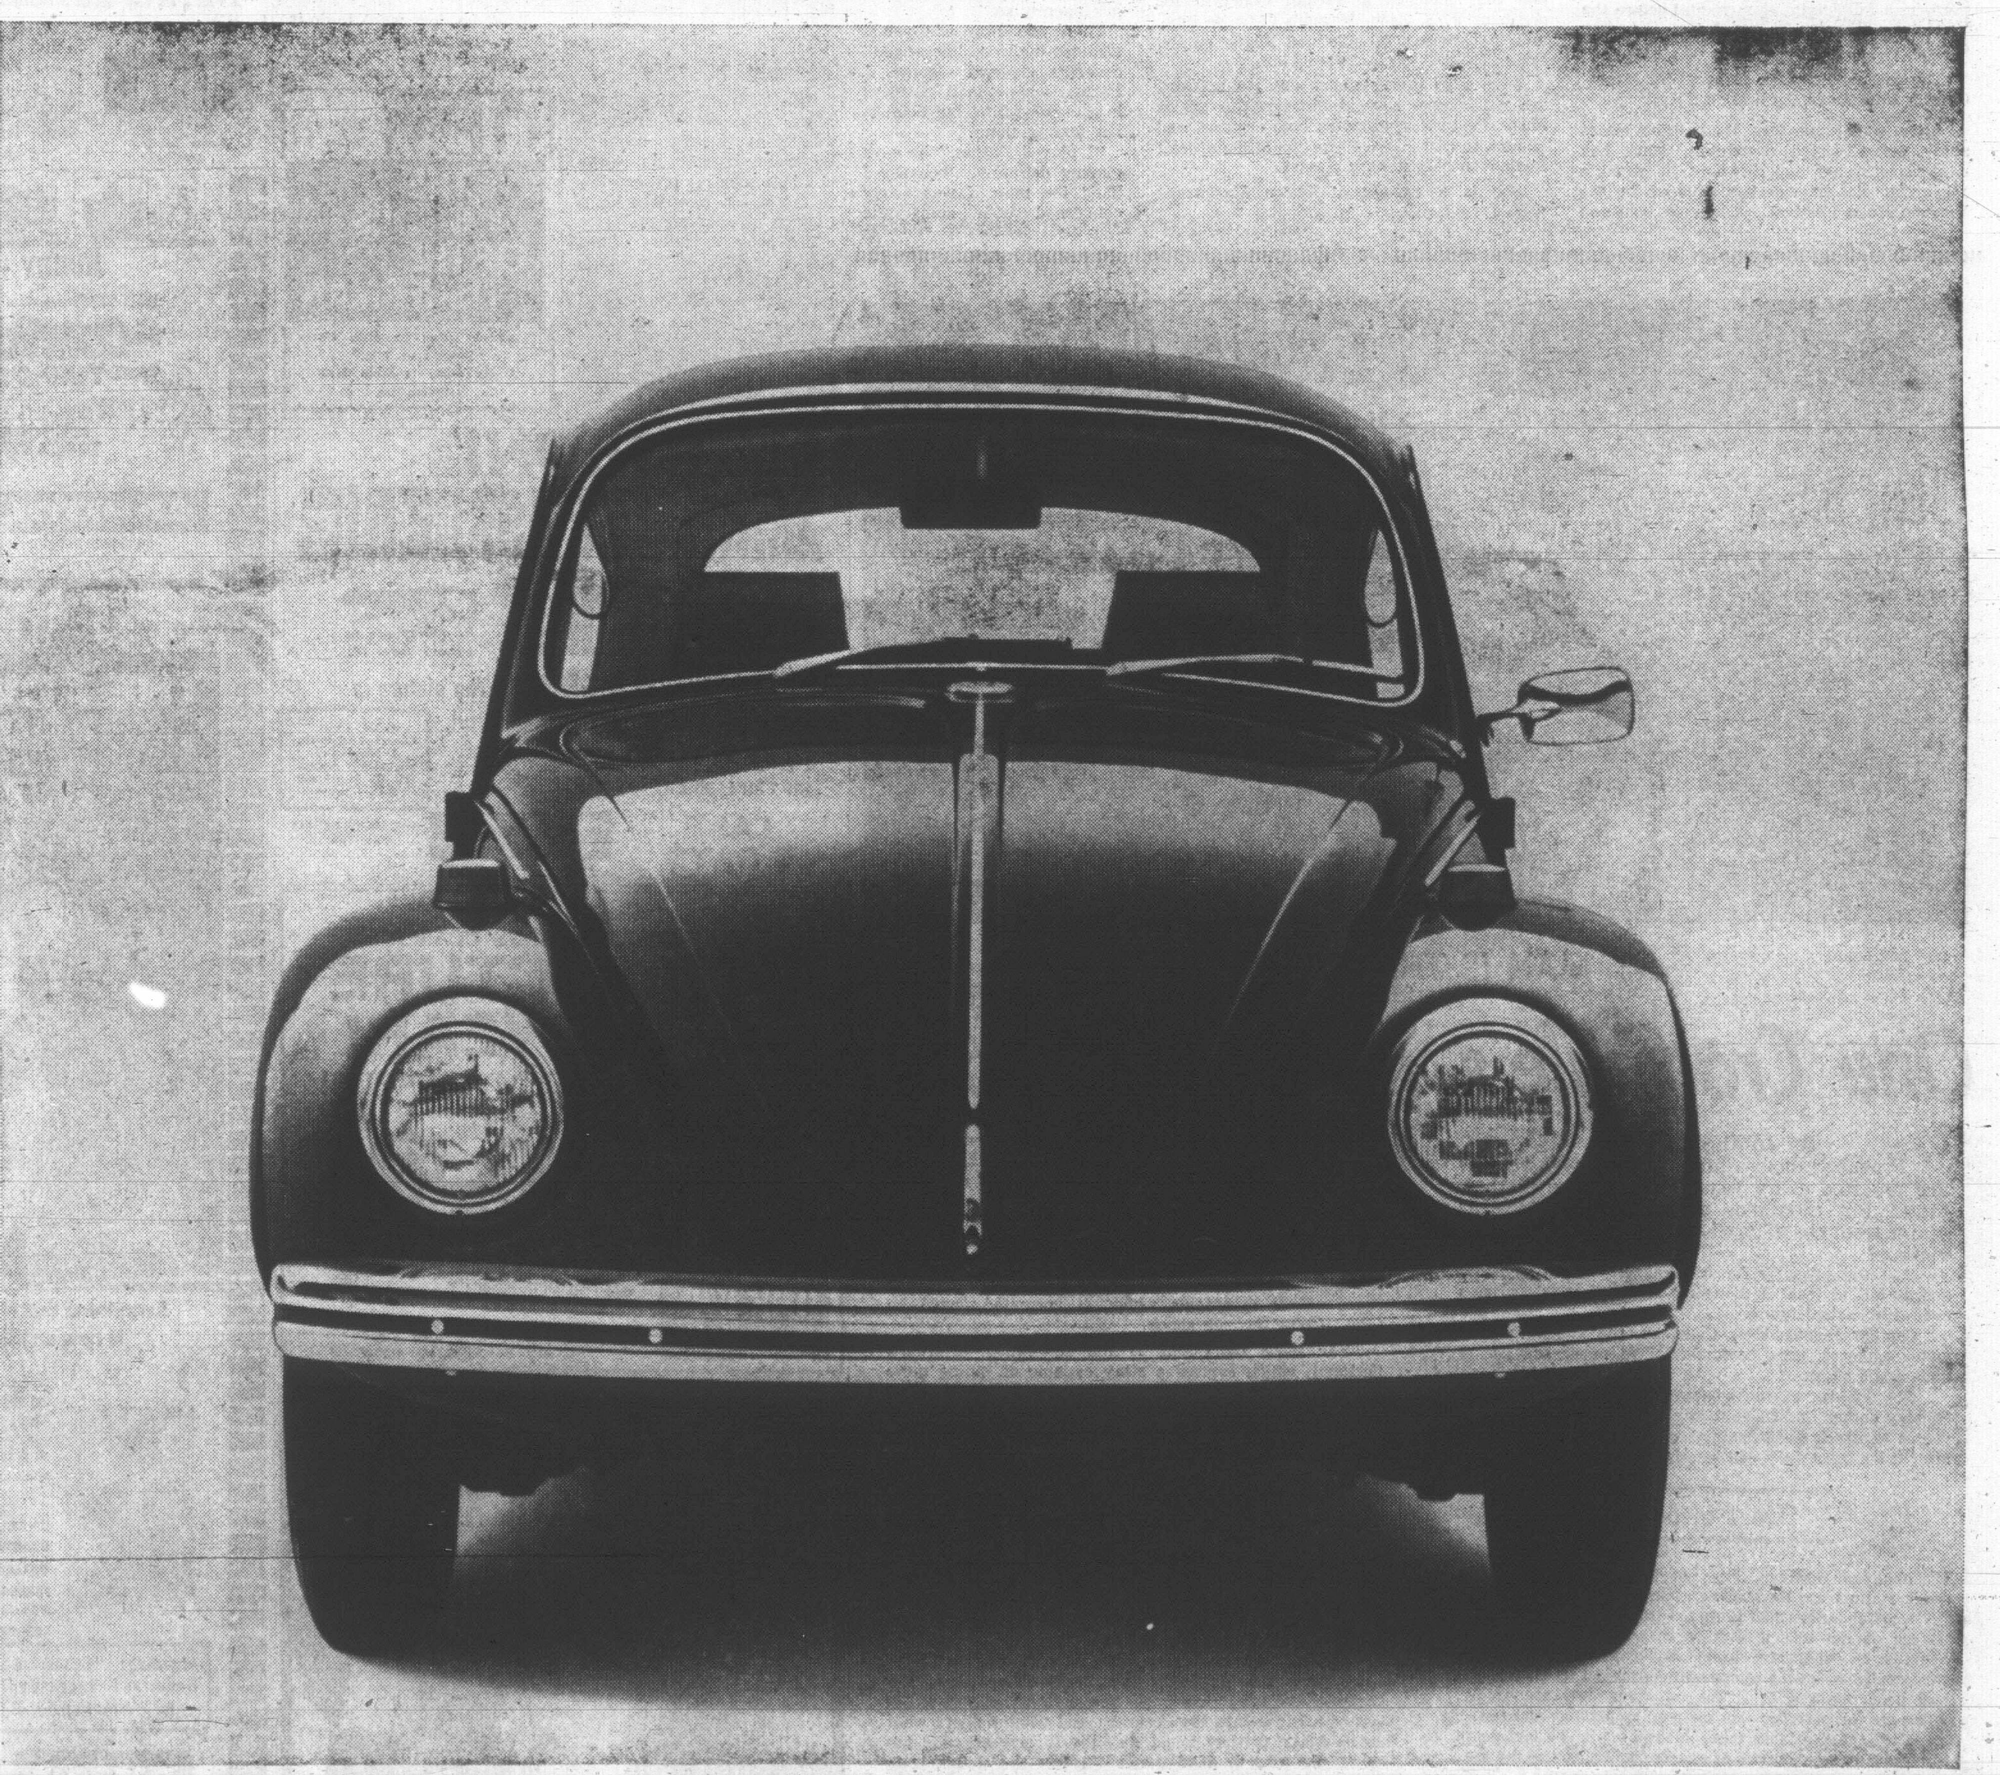
Arnott said in an interview the number of penitentiary inmates has dropped steadily and some penitentiaries are only half full.

Hearing Aid Bill Delayed For Year

A bill designed to regulate the hearing aid business is being held back for a year to give ample time for the public and the industry to study it, Minister Without Portfolio Isabel Dawson said Friday.

She said in a press release that the delay would also enable a study on hearing aids currently being carried out by the federal consumer affairs department to be considered by the provincial government.

The bill, which would have set up a government-appointed board to set standards, licence and police the industry, was introduced in the legislature this session but did not proceed to second reading.



What's new?

You won't hear that question bandied about too often in a Volkswagen showroom.

Nobody oohs and aahs when a brand new beetle goes by on the street.

People have come to think that a Volkswagen is a Volkswagen is a Volkswagen.

Which is a pity. Because underneath those familiar old features are a lot of new features.

In fact, we've made over 75 improvements in the past 3 years alone. Not all of them tiny:

Our engine is now the biggest we've ever made (1600 cc.'s). It makes this year's VW the fastest we've ever made.

We've put in a whole new rear end suspension system. Added a rear window defogger. And improved the heater (twice).

Not to mention our biggest improvement of all: VW Diagnosis, an electronic system that checks out a bug in 80 places.

Behind it all is our old fashioned notion that it makes a lot more sense to work on the way a car works every year, than to play around with the way it looks.

So we devote our time to making parts that were good, better; things that were near perfect, perfect.

That's the reason we don't have a bunch of big, fantastic changes to shout about every year.

No news is good news.

Young Musician Honored

A rare honor has been accorded a young Victoria musician who is a scholarship student at Victoria Conservatory of Music.

She is Mary Chard, just turned 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Chard, Hobbs Road.

A fine all-around musician and budding organ virtuoso, Mary has been invited to perform a full-length organ recital before the Vancouver Chapter of the Royal Canadian College of Organists.

The recital is to take place at St. James' Church, Vancouver, April 12, at 3 p.m.

After something less than three years study with Richard Proudman, Mary has demonstrated her superb talent by winning all organ classes she has entered in the Victoria Music Festival and by being selected the only finalist from British Columbia in last year's international organ competition held in Vancouver.

She also played the final recital in last summer's series at Christ Church Cathedral and the dedicatory recital on the organ of the Roman Catholic church in Ladysmith.

Her Vancouver recital program is a taxing one that includes a Vivaldi Concerto for organ by J. S. Bach, Vierne's Clair de lune, and the stirring Prelude and Fugue on the letters B, A, C, H, by Franz Liszt.

Mary also studies piano with Robin Wood and will appear several times in this year's Music Festival sessions as both organist and pianist, in the latter role in one of the special Beethoven bi-centenary classes.

She is a student at Queen Margaret's School, Duncan.

Scott Doesn't Play by the Usual Rules

By MARTIN KNELMAN

NEW YORK—"Jesus God, shut the door," bellows George C. Scott. "It's cold out there."

From the window of his trailer dressing-room the scene looks like the light show at a psychedelic nightspot, the glare of movie lights breaking the blackness of Central Park and casting shadows against the dazzling snow.

This spectacle might have been conceived as a mime presentation of the movie's title, They Might Be Giants. Actually, the owners of the shadows are not giants, but character actors in raggedy outfits, getting their instructions from director Anthony Harvey.

On the warm side of the glass sits the leader of this unlikely pilgrimage, meticulously dressed in a Sherlock Holmes cape and sitting bolt upright in front of a chess board, giving the situation a stern, hawkeyed inspection.

George C. Scott obviously loathes being interviewed, and slams the door on questions meant to invite expansiveness with answers so blunt and laconic that one feels about as welcome as a blast of cold air.

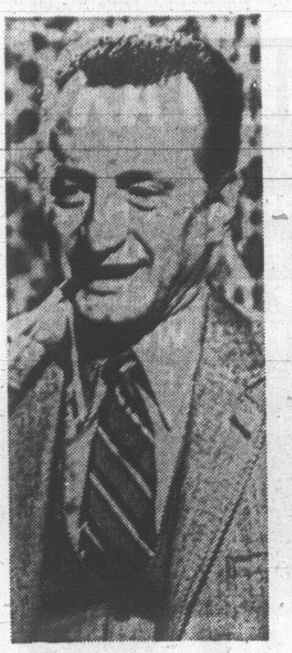
But he does get down to business. "This is sort of a fantasy comedy. At one time I had the rights to the play (by James Goldman, the author of The Lion in Winter), but I could never get it on. The character I play is deranged, but pleasantly and intelligently so."

There are those who would also use the word "deranged" describe General George S. Patton, whom Scott portrays in a current film, but Scott is not among them.

"I played Patton," he says glaring defiantly, "because I liked the man. I was solely concerned with doing the biography of a man who fascinated me, and I don't concern myself with the politics of it, because I don't think that's an actor's business. Patton fascinated me because of his professional ability and because he was a total individualist."



GEORGE C. SCOTT

Those are qualities that are cherished by Scott too. He is an actor's actor, fiercely vocal about his integrity and spoken of with almost mystical reverence by the likes of Paul Newman (who worked with him in The Hustler) and Michael Sarrazin (who got his big break as sidekick to Scott's conman in The Flim-Flam Man).

He doesn't play the movie-star game by the usual rules, and so has cultivated a reputation for being outspoken—which was hardly in danger of being forgotten when Scott launched a personal vendetta on television against an influential movie critic who reviewed Patton disrespectfully.

His most celebrated outburst occurred in the early 60s when Scott's portrait of the gambling villian in The Hustler earned him an Oscar nomination.

He wired the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences asking that his name be withdrawn from consideration because he was offended by the promotional circus—including garish ad campaigns in the Hollywood trade papers on behalf of the nominees—that had become part of the tradition.

Though movie stars would have sold their souls to land a part in Mike Nichols' movie version of Catch-22, Scott turned it down because he felt he'd played the part before, in Dr. Strangelove, and because he hated the book.

And he won't do another television series after his sobering experience with East Side, West Side (whose serious intentions got it dropped from the air in its first season, though many people still remember it as one of the best dramatic programs in TV history).

What he does want to do is more theatre. He worked for Nichols in two Broadway plays, and he directed one himself off-Broadway. "I think it's a better medium for the actor," he explains.

Outside his window Joanne Woodward is skipping toward the lights in her formal gown and green coat, and as a knock at the door signals that the director is ready for him, Scott says simply: "I try to do things that are distinctive, but good material is rare."

Then he steps out into the snow, where he's supposed to stand in the middle of Central Park on a frigid Friday night and tell these freaky shadowcasters: "Genesis has it wrong. We never left the garden. This is Paradise, right under our feet." Somehow, it just doesn't sound like George C. Scott.

MAN IS THE PREY

One Crocodile's Toll: 400 People

By JAMES CLARKE

Probably about a hundred red shark attacks are reported every year, half or more of them fatal. But thousands of people go missing at sea or from coastal areas. How many are shark victims?

It would probably be no exaggeration to say that sharks kill at least a thousand people a year, perhaps even double that number.

Captain Jacques-Yves Cousteau, the pioneer underwater explorer, once confessed: "We never did get to understand sharks."

One known characteristic is that they go for a solitary bather and will actually swim around a group of people to attack one standing alone. And once they have attacked a man they will persistently go for him, even brushing past rescuers. Few people who go out to rescue shark victims are themselves attacked.

Third of Series

Another known fact is that, with very few exceptions, sharks do not attack bathers in water cooler than 70 degrees. In laboratory tests, sharks stopped eating for two months when the temperature dropped to 62. When it had been restored to 71 for ten days they ate avidly. When the temperature was lowered again they stopped.

Most shark attacks take place in water 2-5 feet deep. There are even instances of sharks leaping out of the sea, on to beaches, to take a bite out of somebody.

Nor is the size of the shark any guide; a bather (in the United States) was crippled by a two-foot shark in knee-deep water.

New techniques are now used in treatment. No longer is it deemed advisable to rush victims to hospital: they are now (in most countries) left on the beach for half an hour with their head pointing down the slope and tourniquets are applied. In the past, most people taken out of the sea alive later died from either shock or loss of blood, rarely because a vital organ had been injured. In fact 87 per cent of people attacked are injured below the waist.

Hardly an area in the world is free from the danger of shark attack, although in some areas the risk is negligible. The high risk zone can be taken as a belt between 23½ degrees north, expanding north to 40 degrees in June, July and August and then south in December, January and February. The most northerly coastal shark attack was probably one at Wick, in Scotland, on June 27, 1960.

Millions of pounds are spend on research into repellents, and although it might be unduly pessimistic to say all shark repellents — bar shark nets — have failed miserably, it would not be far from the truth.

Considering the diabolical array of defensive and offensive weapons found in sea creatures, surprisingly few have well-developed venom apparatus. And not one of these can be described as aggressive towards man. One of the most unpopular, but quite pretty, venomous creatures of the sea is the blue bottle or Portuguese man-of-war (Physalia pelagia), which looks rather like a floating jelly fish. Its sting is extremely painful and can cause severe symptoms which, if untreated, could be fatal, if only through shock.

Far more dangerous is the sea wasp (Chironex fleckeri), which carries a sting capable of killing quite quickly. On an Australian beach in 1962 a priest ran screaming from the sea and horrified bathers saw a sea wasp draped across his back. It was peeled off, but the priest died an hour or so later.

I once asked a free diver off the dangerous coast of Portugese East Africa what he considered the most dangerous fish in the area. Unhesitatingly he replied: "Sharks, then 'cuda." Not a week later, in January, 1967, a Portugese soldier swimming in clear water off Lourenco Marques was grabbed by a barracuda which stripped a large piece of flesh from his leg. The soldier swam to a floating tree and clambered into its branches with the fish still leaping at him.

The smallest man-eater is the piranha (cannibal fish) — about a foot long with tiny, needle-sharp teeth. The explorer Colonel Fawcett told how a Brazilian soldier fell out of a canoe into the Corumba and when helpers went to haul him in they found that the fingers gripping the gunwhale were a dead man's fingers: the man's body below the waist had been eaten clean away, trousers and all.

Dr. Dennis Bellamy of the University of Sheffield, who experimented with piranhas, says 50 of them ate a three-inch cube of flesh in "a few seconds," He felt that in certain conditions a few hundred could strip a man to bones in seconds.

Crocodylus niloticus has been in the world 170 million years. It is an evolutionary triumph: not particularly edible; able to live on land, on the water, or under the water; able to eat almost whatever it fancies. It is armor-plated — in fact as nearly bullet-proof as any animal on earth — and has self-renewing teeth.

Undoubtedly some crocodiles actually acquire a preference for man-eating; possibly the worst case on record was on the Kihange River in Central Africa, where over the years 400 people were taken by a 15-foot crocodile. Another crocodile, on the Zambesi, killed about 300 people. The annual toll in Africa is probably about 1,000.

From a Man Who Cares, Advice for All

By JACK SCOTT

DR. BENJAMIN SPOCK

It's going on 25 years ago that Dr. Benjamin McLane Spock's "Baby and Child Care" entered the best-seller list with total sales to date of more than 23 million copies and a fair claim to being the best-loved book, other than the Bible, in North America.

Now, in "Decent and Indecent," his reflections on how to bring up an adult, Dr. Spock has another contender for the title.

It is, to put it simply, a beautiful book, full of shining faith in the capacity of the human race and cold anger at those who forfeit it. The world will be a better place if it sells half as well as that original volume.

"I've spent my life studying and advising how to bring up children to be well adjusted and happy," Dr. Spock explains at the outset. "Now I see the futility of such efforts if these children are then to be incinerated in an imbecillic war, or if, when grown, they find life disillusioning because the society they inherit is confused about sex and gender and brutality, is perverted in its internal and external aims by power-obsessed leaders, and seems oblivious of the loving and creative potentialities of our species."

DECENT AND INDECENT: Our Personal and Political Behaviour by Benjamin Spock. McCall. $6.95.

It was that concern that led Dr. Spock to join the peace movement in 1962 and subsequently to be convicted (later reversed) for aiding young Americans who, in conscience, resisted the draft.

He writes as a man with an uncompromising record of involvement with the young, the conviction that this might be a loving world if we could conquer the hostility-projecting nature of man and outrage at those who have made it an un-loving world through moral blindness or confusion.

It is, above all, a terrible indictment of leadership in the United States, a paranoic police state, in his words, at the mercy of the military-industrial complex.

"The contrast between what we're doing and what we should be doing," he writes, "will be judged a monstrous evil by future generations . . . it will lead us to self-destruction if we cannot cure ourselves and build a friendly world."

Of America's participation in Vietnam: "Add up the totals: a hundred billion dollars spent, forty thousand young Americans dead, a million Vietnamese killed, hundreds of thousands of children orphaned and separated from relatives who as a result will never be emotionally normal, nuclear war hanging over our heads for four years — all so that Lyndon Johnson would not have to admit failure in a power play."

Such furious passages take little away from Dr. Spock's essential optimism that man may yet make a paradise on earth. There is, he believes, an inherent sense of decency, idealism and dignity that may be regained.

"Through lifelong education man has to face more realistically his aggressiveness, his self-deceptiveness and the fact that such a large part of his motivation springs from the unconscious layers of his mind," he writes. "Then he will be in a better position to control the emotional forces that now mislead and endanger him . . . he has to learn again that he is naturally endowed with a potential for idealism, spirituality and creativity that are as real as any of his other abilities."

Like "Baby and Child Care" this is a wide-ranging book that touches on every dilemma of the grown child in a capitalist society, yet always offers the comforting diagnosis that he need merely re-discover his idealism and his belief in his own worth to find an eventual solution.

Repeatedly, throughout the book, Dr. Spock worries that his ideals and standards will seem too old-fashioned and strict to reach the young rebels who "because of the pervasive hypocrisies of our society reject as arbitrary and unproven all sorts of doctrines of restraint."

He makes the fine distinction between a moral standard and a psychological truth and it may be, as he fears, that the younger reader will miss the point.

But this is a book of hope for the young, courageous, passionate and always logical, a sturdy bridge of ideas between generations that will surely inspire those to whom it is dedicated: "the young people, black and white, who are being clubbed, jailed and even killed for showing us the way to justice."

The Brave Died Vainly For a Stupid General

By HUMPHRY DAVY

Most historians would agree that the two most humiliating military disasters to befall British forces in the first half of the 20th century were the fall of Singapore in 1942 and the surrender of Kut in Mesopotamia in the First World War.

Kut el Amarah, a primitive and filthy settlement on the banks of the Tigris, was the site where General Townshend decided to hold out against a superior force of Turkish soldiers and Arab conscripts.

That's the way the flyleaf of this book describes Kut's claim to fame in history. It sounds slightly romantic. But it would have been nearer the truth to have said it will always be remembered as the graveyard of thousands of British and Indian troops who died needlessly because of a stupid general.

THE SIEGE by Russell Braddon. Clarke, Irwin. $7.60.

There were other incompetent generals involved in this disastrous theatre of war, but Townshend must take most of the blame for the siege, the surrender and the terrible hardships and cruelties his men endured in captivity.

After a siege of 147 days in the winter of 1915-16, Townshend and the 13,000 defenders surrendered to the Turks.

The worst was to come. The survivors, under-nourished and weak, were obliged to march across a blistering 1,200-mile desert and over freezing mountain passes.

Their captors beat them, deprived them of water and food and forced them to work under terrible conditions.

It resulted in no less than 7,000 of those 13,000 who surrendered at Kut, dying as prisoners of war.

And that wasn't all. A further 23,000 casualties were incurred in vain attempts to raise the siege before Townshend surrendered.

But the appalling thing about the Kut affair is that Townshend, who should have tried to help the lot of his men in captivity, did absolutely nothing for them. He himself lived in luxury in Constantinople as a prisoner of the Turks.

Even after the war, Townshend and senior members of the army staff did nothing to recognize the men who fought so bravely at Kut and endured so much in captivity.

The only man who did recognize them and took time to write a letter to the survivors was their sovereign, King George V.

The King's disgust with Townshend's behavior is no doubt the reason the war office dropped the general so quickly. Otherwise he would have found some supporters after the war to explain the whys and wherefores.

But if anything positive can be said of the Kut tragedy it is that Britain learned a lesson which benefitted soldiers in the Second World War. There was probably no allied army which took such pains in screening its officers for leadership qualities.

It is true, a few senior officers not worthy of their rank may have slipped through, but even they were not as inadequate as some of the generals who fought in Mesopotamia.

Braddon, author also of The Naked Island, writes an interesting account of the siege of Kut and the march of the captives across the desert, but it does have some weaknesses.

He seems to excuse the brutality of the enemy towards the prisoners and this is hard to understand.

He also seems to think that Townshend was a brilliant tactician when actually the battles he won prior to the siege were due to the weakness of the Turkish general.

TOWNSHEND

Townshend was absolutely incompetent as a general but bluffed his way through. He had no faith in his native troops, and had it not been for the leadership qualities of his officers, it is doubtful he would have won a victory.

The author also notes that Townshend had an "illustrious" ancestor who fought with Wolfe at Quebec. Had he done a little research he might have dropped the adjective to describe the 18th century general.

The general who fought in the Canadian expedition nearly ruined the campaign. Like his descendant of the Second World War, he was self-centred and was critical of his superiors.

No man did more than this general to discredit Wolfe. But when he took command of the British troops after Wolfe's death, he had not the imagination to prevent the French army from escaping to Montreal.

These two Townshends were certainly no credit to the British army.

Nature Writing Should Be Muted

By ARTHUR MAYSE

Some books demand to be read in an evening or a night, but others less fortunately conceived exert no such compulsion. One of the latter is Franklin Russell's "Searchers at the Gulf," an excursion into the world of wild nature that is less than a complete success.

Russell conducts us through the cycle of a year in, over and around a large saltwater expanse. This body of water is not identified, but it could be the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Since man has no place in the account, we are left to assume that the author has cast back to an era when nature maintained its balance without human interference..

SEARCHERS AT THE GULF by Franklin Russell. McClelland and Stewart. $5.95.

The characters are bird, fish, animal, and Russell's gulf itself. They are subject to the seasons and their own tribal urgings. They devour and become prey, they multiply or die. The chief usefulness of the book lies in its reiteration of a truth rarely stated.

This is that nature without man was no less ruthless than prodigal.

A parasitic growth could decimate a vast herring run, or a fluke of current wipe out a shellfish population that had maintained itself for years beyond counting.

Russell is plainly well-versed in his subject. But his writing too frequently gets in the way of his story. Where simplicity would serve his purpose better, he is often high-pitched and irritatingly melodramatic, This sort of thing imposes a heavy burden on the reader.

A guided tour needn't be conducted at a shout to make its effect. The best of the nature writers — Williamson in England, for example, and Haig-Brown in Canada — favored a quieter approach.

Russell, New Zealand born and now writing from the United States after a number of years in Canada, has much to pass on that is worth telling. But he could tell it better.

RENATA ADLER

A Clear Eye In Murky Time

By PETER MURRAY

It's not easy to admit, but in journalism it is often the girls who have the clearest eye and sharpest typewriter.

While it may be true that relatively few of them escape the shackles of the "women's pages" or the traditional sob-sister tasks, those who do usually make an impression.

The distinguishing characteristics of this small but select group of ladies seem to be wit, erudition, a penetrating mind and eye for detail, and the true reporter's unobtrusiveness that so many of journalism's male superstars lack.

In this country one thinks of the late Judith Robinson of the Toronto Telegram, a top-notch reporter in a number of fields. In the U.S. in the fifties there was Marya Mannes, who exposed the foibles of that giddy period better than anyone else and set the standard for today's social critics.

TOWARD A RADICAL MIDDLE by Renata Adler. Random House. $9.50.

(Miss Mannes hasn't lost the touch: she was one of the few reviewers last year who dared pan that much over-praised scatological novel, Portnoy's Complaint).

And now there is a new distaff star, Renata Adler. Miss Adler has actually been around for a while, starting her career on the New Yorker in 1962, but it was her year as a movie critic for the New York Times between 1968 and 1969 that gained her national attention and resulted in the publication of two books this year.

One of these A Year in the Dark, is a collection of her film reviews which has been highly praised by some other movie critics, normally a highly competitive group. The other is this volume, which gathers together 14 pieces of reporting which originally appeared in the New Yorker.

They run the gamut from group therapy to the Six-Day war. Included are essays on the pop music business and a demolition job on French literary figures Jean Genet and Jean Paul Sartre.

Miss Adler, like most women, come to think of it, can be both cutting and compassionate.

In one devastating piece of criticism she comes down hard on some of the big name New York book reviewers who try to puff up the importance of their own work above that of the creative authors they are supposed to be considering.

In "The Thursday Group," the longest and best essay in the book, she confronts the new fad for togetherness in psychology, suggesting that therapy groups may be merely "emotional playgrounds" for the troubled, but also conceding they may lead in time to "some useful conclusions about the human condition."

Miss Adler apparently was permitted to sit in as an observer at a number of sessions of a "T-Group" in New York and if you ever wondered what they are about it's all here.

At first the little cruelties and bizarre inter-actions of group members create revulsion at the whole idea, but Miss Adler never stacks the cards against the rather pathetic participants, and one is left at the end with a feeling of uncertainty and more sympathy than most of us cynics would care to admit.

In an Introduction Miss Adler fixes her position squarely between the yawning generational and political gaps in the U.S., ticking off both the mindless nihilism of youth and the repressiveness of a system managed by the older sell-outs. Hence the title.

Beyond that, however, we get to know very little about her, as we do, say, about the swaggering new journalists in the Norman Mailer manner.

But we do discover that she is sharp and clear-headed, remarkably free of bias and cant. Those are assets to be prized in these tumultuous and confusing times when it is difficult for most of us to get a clear picture of what the hell is going on.

We are going to need guides who can stay cool and rational in the heavy going ahead. These are assets Renata Adler has displayed here, and it is likely we will be hearing much more from her in the seventies.

MORDECAI RICHLER

Exile's Critical Concern About Canada

By THEO RICHMOND

LONDON — "I think of myself as both a Jewish writer and a Canadian writer, because whatever I produce has been formed by a combination of an interaction of the two."

Self-evident perhaps to readers of Mordecai Richler. One page into almost anything he's written and you're with Canada and the Jews. Both have their vulnerable areas, a sensitivity about what others think of them, so inevitably his writings have caused offence.

"I'm very critical about Canada, I guess out of a tremendous sense of concern but not as a publicist." In his novels he draws heavily on his underprivileged childhood in Montreal, where he was born. His family came from Russia.

"My father drove a truck and hustled scrap. He was a junk dealer — my mother called him a metal merchant."

The Canadian Jewish community has prospered. As Richler points out, the smell of pickled herring has been displaced by deodorant. They would like to forget the days in tenements and sweatshops. Richler's books won't let them.

"Within, like, the Jewish middle-class circles I'm regarded as an anti-Semite. What I choose to celebrate they are ashamed of."

At 19 he left Montreal's Sir George Williams University, where he was bored, and came to Europe. He spent two years roughing it in Paris, sending off short stories to American journals and finding them "rebounding with a sickening whack."

In his hotel, a former Wehrmacht brothel, it was routine to hammer on the door of his room before entering, in order to scatter the rats; and their droppings had to be shaken out of his sweaters. But at least he was "ghetto-liberated, a real expatriate."

His home today, impeccably tidy and rodent-free is a suburban house in Kingston called "Hill Crest." His second wife. Florence, is a Canadian ex-fashion model he met over here. They have five children. At 38 he has had six novels, numerous short stories and essays published.

Richler's last book, "Cocksure" — "my first scatological novel" — was highly praised here and in America. The paperback has done well in spite of an initial ban by W. H. Smith's, the booksellers.

This month, with an overwhelming sense of relief, he hands over to his publishers the bulky manuscript of "St Urbain's Horseman," a novel he has been working on for five years.

"For a long time I got stuck, badly stuck. It's the first time like I'm trying to bring together realism and satire."

The central character is a hypochrondriac living in London and maybe not surprisingly, a Canadian Jew. Richler himself tends to worry about his health and frequent researches into Black's Medical Dictionary while he's writing the book have not exactly helped.

The converted loft of his house makes a good place to write in, but can Kingston, Surrey, really be his scene?

"I need space and I can't afford a house like this in Hampstead. But I'm an urban man. I like going to bookshops, looking in cafes. So if I'm restless I take the car into London at noon and just spend the afternoon walking around. Kingston is dead to me. What I really miss out here is that around five o'clock I'd like to walk to a pub. I like drinking. When I go to New York and see Jewish novelists I know, everyone wants to eat cake. And have coffee. They think I'm a very heavy drinker but I don't."

It happens to be five o'clock and he pours himself a gin. "When they come over here I say to Florence — 'just bake a cake.'"

Richler has lived here since 1954, making several trips back to Canada. He spent last year as writer in residence at Sir George Williams. A novel he wrote ten years ago, "The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz," he found was now prescribed university course reading. "In my absence I become a figure. Now that's very heady and dangerous stuff for a writer. You see there are a lot of overestimated writers over there who are kind of world-famous in Canada and who daren't leave.

Once described as "a professional abominator," Richler has a sharp wit and admits:

"I'm certainly cruel, yeah I guess I've got the cruel instinct. There are very few people I like but I'm intensely loyal to them." His hatreds are full-blooded and include John Buchan ("an ignorant, nasty-minded anti-Semite"), Ian Fleming ("a polished Sammy Glick") and Harold Nicolson ("worse than Buchan or Fleming").

There are more. "I hate the Germans. I went and lived over there for four months. I wanted to see it. I felt a mixture of terror and hatred."

Does he ever feel guilty? "Yeah, I feel guilty once a week . . . rationally I feel guilty, but I really do hate the Germans."

Israel too failed to win him over. "I did get a lot of pleasure out of there being a Jewish state, but then came a feeling that the Arabs are the Jews of Israel. I got into violent quarrels. I couldn't live in a country where all the concerns are Jewish. I found it overwhelming — everywhere you look Jews and Jewish problems. It's just too much!"

For the time being it looks as though Kingston will remain his base. Perhaps his greatest fear is of living so long out of his own country.

"I'm drawing from my London experiences but it's an effort. Naipaul once put it all very clearly — 'I don't know what an Englishman does when he gets home.' There are nights when I feel, no matter what, I should go back. But" — he thinks about it and laughs — "I guess I don't like it anywhere."

Rapport Between Actors Grows Over Many Roles

Richard Galuppi as Turcaret

By AUDREY JOHNSON

I remember, years ago when a small repertory company inhabited what is now the McPherson Playhouse, some people complaining to me they got tired of going to the productions because you always saw the same actors.

They were, of course, missing the essential point of the rep company—which is the development of a closely-knit ensemble.

Just as with a musical ensemble of any kind or size, the best performance is not obtained until the group has worked together for some time, so it is with the performance of plays.

Ideal results are most likely to be achieved from a group of actors who have had a long association with one another.

A dramatic performance, you see, is much like a musical performance. It has elements of rhythm, tempo and in effect legato and staccato. It must be phased, it must have contrasting tonal levels and climax.

The players must relate to each other through listening and responding. They cannot merely speak and move.

That is why it is such a valuable aid if a play director has a strong musical sense.

And that is why when actors become accustomed to each others' personal rhythms, timing, manner of phrasing and tone, because of constantly acting together, they are apt to give ensemble performances that range from deeply satisfying to brilliant.

This factor figures strongly in the reputation of such top-flight examples as the Bolshoi Theatre, the Berliner Ensemble and the British National Theatre.

The actors' eye-view of the situation can be gathered in listening to Richard Galuppi and Harriet Allen discuss the current roles they are playing in Turcaret and comparing them with almost a dozen other occasions on which they have shared the stage.

"We're very happy playing together," says Harriet and she gets a hearty nod from Dick.

"When two people have played opposite each other as often as we have there is a type of rapport that develops between them that makes acting a real joy."

Both actors feel not only does this rapport make for smoothness and more flowing scenes with more vivid accents, but that a far greater spontaneity is possible because of the assurance they have in each other and the instinctive nature of their mutual reactions.

They will be seen as Turcaret, the financier and his two-timing mistress in Ralph Allen's adaptation of the farce at McPherson Playhouse Wednesday through Saturday.

The elegantly ludicrous roles add a new dimension to their various stage relationships.

On the McPherson and Phoenix stages in Victoria Dick and Harriet have played father and daughter in Hamlet (Polonius and Ophelia), pitted enemies in Merchant of Venice (Shylock and Portia), master and servant in Tartuffe (Orgon and Dorine) and chaste lovers in Measure for Measure (The Duke and Isabella).

In Pittsburgh they had played, among other things, boon and rowdy companions as Sir Toby Belch and Maria in Twelfth Night.

With their appearance in the somewhat Rabelaisian and wildly funny Turcaret, for the first time they add the portrayal of sensual love to their repertoire.

This then will be the fifth occasion upon which these two skilled actors and several others in the cast will have been seen here playing together.

What an opportunity for Victoria theatre buffs to witness the development of true ensemble playing.

Aside from that however, one thing a backstage preview has guaranteed — Turcaret will be visually brilliant as have all its sister productions and may even eclipse them.

The splendid 18th century set, costumes, furnishings and props — the latter ranging all the way from an 18th century tennis recquet to a live fighting cock — provide the acting ensemble with an ideal mounting that cannot help but add an extra dimension of inspiration.

Mexican Soap Opera Kept Clean, Brief

MEXICO CITY — So popular are television's soap operas that Mexico City housewives sob through 50 hours of them in prime time every week.

Produced at about $20,000 a series, they boast the country's best talent and are frequently produced on location at historic sites all over Mexico.

Different from its American counterpart, the Mexican soaper called Telenov ela is strictly censored so as not to offend "the sensibilities of a 15-year-old."

And, whereas American soap stories seemingly grind on endlessly, the Mexican version usually winds up after 50 chapters, at which point the heroine either dies or goes back to her provincial home disillusioned.

Polls conducted to determine their popularity regularly reveal soap operas capture the largest viewing audience.

And if a housewife misses a day's episode, she can see a rerun of the week of one of the series on Saturday night, competing with the Saturday night fights.

Seven Years After Beatlemania Began They Just Get Together for Business

By GRANVILLE WATTS

LONDON — "The Beatles are dead, long live the Beatles."

Putting his feet up on a desk and munching a piece of chocolate cake, John Lennon appeared to refer to the singing group in the past tense, as if they had already expired.

In many ways the Beatles of old have. The Beatles of 1970 are something vastly different.

It's more than seven years now since Beatlemania burst on an unsuspecting world and Lennon, Paul McCartney, George Harrison and Ringo Starr helped start a youth revolution.

For four years they were hardly ever out of each other's sight. They worked, played, travelled and lived together.

The Beatles of today are married men, all approaching 30. They are still bound together economically, but they haven't staged a live concert together for more than two years and Ringo has said they never will again.

Now the only time the whole group can be seen is at a rare closed-door meeting at Apple, their business organization, or an an occasional recording session.

"It's like an era is over," Lennon said in an interview. He is the only Beatle who goes daily to the $1,200,000 Apple offices in London's Saville Row.

But his activities there are mainly to do with his peace campaign and the various avant-garde ventures he pursues with his Japanese-born wife, Yoko. The two are inseparable and Yoko's influence on Lennon is obvious.

"She has opened me up," Lennon said. "She's encouraged me to do things."

"I feel younger, fresher, more excited by life. As a Beatle I'd got a bit stodgy — a bit too fat and successful."

Lennon and Yoko had their hair cut short during a visit to Denmark in January, donating the fallen locks to raise funds for a Negro welfare centre in London.

The other three Beatles still sport long hair and beards. They appear to show little interest in Lennon's obsession with the peace cause, pursuing their own interests while the Beatles' money-making machine seems to roll on endlessly.

Royalties from records alone flow into Apple at an estimated rate of $2,400,000 a year. Last December, the Beatles turned down a $4,000,000 offer to tour the United States.

Any major record the group produces seems to go automatically to the top of the British and U.S. hit parades.

The Beatles appear to have learned one useful lesson of survival; to ration the Beatles to themselves as well as their public.

Ringo and George now are making their own albums, and Ringo is building himself a second career in films, recently starring alongside Peter Sellers in The Magic Christian.

Even music, the great common obsession, has changed for the Beatles.

Ringo has developed a taste for oldies and is making an album of songs like Night and Day in a 1920s sort of voice.

Harrison, whose love of the sitar first interested the Beatles in Indian music, remains fascinated by guitar techniques and is still rated the best instrumentalist of the group.

Lennon has been recording with a group called the Plastic Ono and his composition, Give Peace a Chance, was sung at the Washington moratorium protest last year.

Paul is rarely seen in the Apple office. He has been producing a pop group called Badfinger and is working on "a lot of songs either in my head or not yet interpreted."

He wears sober, dark-blue business suits and can often be seen collecting Heather, his six-year-old stepdaughter, from a state-run primary school in suburban St. John's Wood.

Although the press is sometimes hostile, the fans are as loyal as ever and a live Beatles concert would be a sellout no matter how big the hall or stadium.

But do they want to go on being Beatles?

"I can't see me still being a Beatle when I'm 30," Lennon said in 1964. He has until Oct. 9 to prove it.

BALLET FLAMENCO

Montoya and Ciro

In its final curtain call for the season, wearing its impresario cloak, Victoria Symphony presents Ciro and his Ballet Flamenco at the Royal Theatre, April 12 and 13.

Castilian-born Ciro sidestepped the legal career chosen for him by his father to become one of the world's greatest exponents of flamenco and other Spanish dance forms.

Since 1967 Ciro has lived a dual existence between his Madrid home base and New Orleans where he has founded a brilliantly successful nightclub, the Chateau Flamenco, in the heart of the French Quarter.

He has toured the United States as choreographer for the American National Opera's production Carmen. With his troupe he now is on his second tour for the Hurok organization.

Lead female dancer is Rosa Montoya, Madrid-born Spanish gypsy, youngest and most outstanding member of a family whose name has been synonymous with flamenco for generations.

The program to be presented here April 12 at 3 p.m. and April 13 at 8:30 p.m., includes, as well as fiery gypsy traditional dances, Clasico — an 18th century Goyesque style of dance — and symbolical dramatic numbers.

Guitar soloists with the company are Bunyan Webb and Benito Palacios.

Some of the numbers are danced to the music of Albeniz and one was inspired by a poem of the great Spanish playwright-poet, Federico Garcia Lorca.

Tickets are available through the symphony box office at Eatons.

Tourers Come Home

Bastion Theatres touring company of nine concludes its 1969-70 school tours this month having chalked up a total of 126 performances.

In recent weeks the company has visited interior points and will conclude the season with local engagements.

The company consists of Doreen Crook, Barry Flatman, Charles Harper, Bill Hosie, Margaret Martin, Erica Peavy, Mark Smith, stage manager Kyra Smitz and musical director Peter Williams.

Some of the players will step out of their tour roles and into the production of That Man From Moscow, Bastion's final major offering of the season.

The musical, based on Gogol's The Inspector General, will be seen at McPherson Playhouse, April 16-24.

By GARY ARNOLD

Barring earthquake, deluge or apocalypsy—and the whim of the judges—the climax of the 41st annual awards program of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on Tuesday should be the moment when John Wayne saunters up to accept the Oscar as best actor of 1969 for his performance in "True Grit."

If custom is being strictly followed, he'll receive the statuette from Barbra Streisand, last year's co-winner (with Katherine Hepburn) as best actress.

It would be difficult to dream up a more amusing summit meeting of the stars, an episode whose potential for myth, history and poignance ranks with the great confrontation scenes from Hollywood epics.

Nearly everyone seems to be taking it for granted that Wayne will win, and it would be odd, indeed, if Hollywood blew a nostalgic opportunity of this magnitude. In a period of change and anxiety and retrenchment in the American film industry, at the start of a new decade, time may be running out for grand, glamorous gestures and salutes to the old glory.

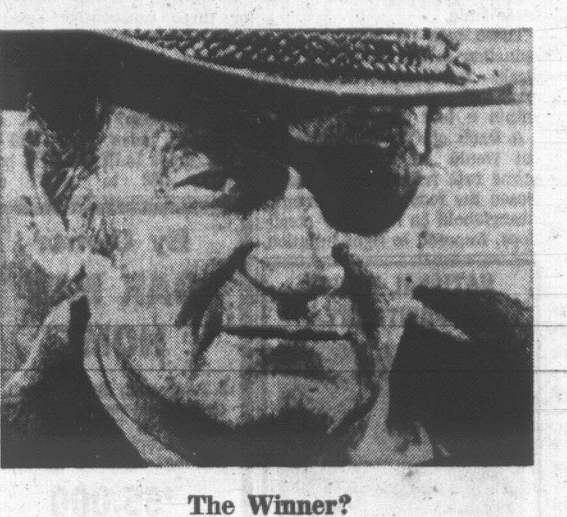
Even if one prefers other performances (the competition for best actor — Richard Burton in "Anne of the Thousand Days," Peter O'Toole in "Goodbye, Mr. Chips" and Dustin Hoffman and John Voight in "Midnight Cowboy" — might be rather lively in other years), the idea of an Oscar for Wayne is sentimentally irresistible.



The Winner?

It would come after 40 years of movie stardom, principally in westerns and action melodramas, and "True Grit" itself was an ideal summation of that career: Wayne, our archetypal young and middle-aged cowboy, having a fine time acting his age and satirizing his image as an archetypal old cowboy, grizzled and drunken and reactionary. What could be more appropriate?

Despite his longevity and his few hundred pictures, Wayne was nominated for an Oscar only once before — in 1949 for "The Sands of Iwo Jima," when Broderick Crawford won with "All The King's Men." In all likelihood, the present nomination is not only a golden opportunity but also the last chance.

There's nothing particularly upsetting about sentimental Oscars, provided the sentiment coincides with a certain measure of achievement. This is the case with Wayne and to some extent with the best actress and supporting actor categories.

In the former, two young, gifted second-generation stars, Jane Fonda ("They Shoot Horses, Don't They?") and Liza Minnelli ("The Sterile Cuckoo"), rate as co-favorites, while in the latter it's Gig Young ("They Shoot Horses") a three-time nominee with easily the best role of a long career.

Young also has a strong precedent in his favor (stronger than Jack Nicholson's monopoly on the critical awards for "Easy Rider") — the supporting actor award tends to go to guys who've been doing yeoman service for quite a while (Ed Begley, Walter Matthau, Martin Balsam, George Kennedy, Jack Albertson).

The only category without a trace of nostalgic or dynastic or veteran appeal is supporting actress, in which all five competitors are first-time nominees.

There's an unusually strong American contingent—Goldie Hawn in "Cactus Flower," Dyan Cannon (the probable winner) in "Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice" and Cathy Burns (probably the best performance) in "Last Summer."

They've been helped by a couple of glaring omissions — of British actresses — Sian Phillips in "Goodbye, Mr. Chips" and Celia Johnson in "The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie." Over all, the young American actresses are in a much better position to win than the young American actors.

The truly dumbfounding category of the year is best cinematography. Somehow, four beautifully photographed movies — "The Wild Bunch," "Easy Rider," "Medium Cool" and "Z" — failed to prevail over the likes of "Hello, Dolly!" and "Marooned" and (are they kidding?) — "Anne of The Thousand Days."

The award probably will be won — by default under the circumstances — by Conrad Hall for "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid." There's no other way to save face.

The omission of "The Wild Bunch" is strange because Lucien Ballard, the director of cinematography, has been one of Hollywood's great cameramen for better than 30 years. He's never won an Oscar, and he certainly can't be confused by his colleagues in the American Society of Cinematographers with one of those non-guild upstarts like Laszlo Kovacs, who shot "Easy Rider."

This is one of those cases where you're baffled by the absence of sentiment and peer-group appreciation. The fact that Ballard also photographed "True Grit" might have made a neat parlay with Wayne's probable award.

The nominees for best picture — "Anne of the Thousand Days," "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," "Hello, Dolly!" "Midnight Cowboy" and "Z" — don't quite reflect the year as a whole or even box-office figures (for example, "Easy Rider" and "Goodbye, Columbus" and "Bob and Carol" may be more profitable than "Anne" or "Dolly").

However, it's a workable compromise, since the two pictures that represent "new" tendencies — "Midnight Cowboy" and "Z" — have a good chance of winning. A victory for any of the other three — a dull costume drama, an oversized musical (albeit the best musical in a bad year for musicals), and a whimsical-devious western spoof — would be rather disheartening.

This is definitely the right time to boost the stock of movies that are simultaneously dramatic, humane, contemporary in subject matter and, at the same time, popular.

Evidently, there's enough of an arthouse clique within the Motion Picture Academy to secure nominations for films like "Z" this year and "The Battle of Algiers" last year.

Whether it's sufficient to win major awards for good foreign pictures is another question. The inclusion of "Z" in the best picture categorie is almost an unprecedented achievement in itself — Jean Renoir's "La Grande Illusion" was the only film to make it previously, in a field of 10 nominees in 1938.

Contrary to popular belief, there are no academy bylaws preventing foreign language movies from being nominated as best picture. In many cases it may even be wiser for distributors to go for the big category rather than best foreign language film, in which there is only one entry per country and national film bureaucracies may designate their most innocuous movies for academy award consideration.

This year the ideal split would surely be "Midnight Cowboy" as best picture — the one potential obstacle is its "X" rating — and "Z," which qualified in both categories, as best foreign language picture.

For better or worse, the results of 3,100 ballots in 22 categories, plus a bundle of non-competitive honors, will be announced this Tuesday evening, beginning at 7 p.m. (PST) and ending — with luck — at 9.

FONDA MINNELLI

. . . toss-up

Joining Miss Streisand (out of competition this year) as "Friends of Oscar" will be Wayne, Ali MacGraw (also overlooked when nominations were being passed around), Clint Eastwood, Elizabeth Taylor, Burton, Myrna Loy, Elliott Gould (nominated for his role in "Bob and Carol", but more or less passing through on his way to stardom), Fred Astaire and, of course, Bob Hope.

The setting is once again the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion of the Los Angeles Music Centre, and a television audience of a few score million in the U.S., Mexico and Canada is anticipated. The 41st academy awards will also be beamed — by film, tape or kinescope—to 32 other nations.

An academy newsletter comments as follows: "Various estimates of the potential audience have ranged from a quarter to half a billion viewers; there is no European or Asian rating service that can give accurate figures on the actual overseas audience." Emerging nations take note: Nielsen may be there before you know

SOPRANO SOLO episodes in the Brahms Requiem to be performed under the direction of Dr. George Corwin, Monday and Wednesday, will be sung by Catherine Young, most recent addition to Victoria's ranks of professional singers. The beautiful Requiem is being performed by an ensemble of 300 singers and orchestral musicians. The choir is is the combined Victoria Choral Society and University of Victoria Chorus. Monday's performance, at 8 p.m., takes place on campus in the Uvic gymnasium. Wednesday's, at the same hour, will be at Christ Church Cathedral. All proceeds from both performances will go toward the Taylor Scholarship Fund for young musicians in training at Uvic. Tickets available at Eaton's, Western Music Co. and Uvic Music Department.

Music Festival Program Full Of Promise

A fat green paperback with a ruggedly inky impression of Beethoven on its cover came off the press this week.

It's an annual spring publication that will get wide distribution and much handling before the month of April is out.

The cover reads. 1970 Official Programme, Music Festival Greater Victoria. A slight inversion there but unimportant.

What matters is that it is packed with information concerning the event which opens April 13 for two weeks, and involves in one way and another, literally thousands of Victorians.

It's available at Western Music, Hall and Fairfield and the Bernie Porter Studio.

Those who enjoy music and dance will do themselves a favor by obtaining a copy and prowling through it for they will find it offers any number of opportunities to spend an absorbing couple of morning, afternoon or evening hours throughout the two weeks.

For example, there's a fine piano concerto class in which movements from all five of the Beethoven concertos will be performed, and a good female operatic class with nine entries, a vocal concert group class with eight entries and a musical comedy class with three.

In the first week there are the popular and colorful folk dance classes and some exciting string competition.

The exceptional young violinist-cellist sister and brother from Vancouver who startled listeners last year, Gwen and Desmond Hoebig, are back to vie with some outstanding Victoria string players.

Full recorder classes, school orchestras, string ensembles and choirs and solo and ensemble accordion sessions also take place during the first week.

Normally all school classes are contained within one week but as the bands and band instrument adjudicator, Dr. William Revelli, was not able to meet the first week schedule, this section has been moved to the second week.

All junior and adult vocal, piano and speech arts are included between April 20 and 24. The Festival Highlights concert occurs on April 25 at McPherson Playhouse and will feature performances by Medallion, Rose Bowl and major bursary winners.

Belmont Band To Perform At McPherson

Next school music organization to present a Sunday concert at McPherson Playhouse is the Belmont Senior Secondary Band.

The concert is scheduled for April 12 at 2:30 p.m.

Music selected by the director, Lt.-Cmdr. H. G. Cuthbert, covers classical, modern and Broadway musicals.

Of special interest in the classical field is Russian Masters' Suite which incorporates the first movement from Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 3, a dance from Rimsky-Korsakov's Le Coq D'Or, and the Coronation Scene from the Mussorgsky opera, Boris Godunov.

Another highlight is Harold Walters' adaptation for band of the melody and rhythm of the Mexican folk musicians, the Mariachis.

Broadway is represented by a setting of music from Hello Dolly, designed to capture the true feeling of the Broadway pit orchestra and the marching overture from Paint Your Wagon.

Trumpet and trombone trios, a woodwind quintet and xylophone duet are also included in the program.

Trumpeters are Kathy Winter, Matthew Nicoll and Doug Collinge. Trombonists are Keith Dalsin, Ken Rayner and Pat Wheatcroft, and the quintet consists of flautists Linda Blaus and Mary Jane Gilbody and clarinetists Rose Chow, Brenda Jackson and Wendy Fredin.

The xylophone duet, Two Imps, will be played by Bill Alexander and Laurilyn Greig.

'Inward Image' Prints

. . . With Gordon Rice

Helen Piddington is a printmaker who has worked for a long time in an intense and highly personal style. This is not to say her prints are private, or a world closed to us.

One believes that the depth and beauty and strangeness of her visions are presented as clearly as possible in her work. We do not know whether her images, so strong and yet somehow deeply illusive, are seen before she begins to work or whether they are revealed to her in the act of working. They are authentic visions in any case.

Depth seems to be the word that sounds in one's head scanning this show of prints, now at the Print Gallery at its new Wharf Street location (through April 8).

The deeper one goes into one's personal inclinations, loves, and fascinations, the harder it will be for many to follow. And yet sensitive people will find here that some familiar chord has been struck, and they will be able to respond. This is perhaps because in the depths of the mind there are many universal secrets.

Rather than referring to these prints as "abstract" work, one might prefer some term like "subconscious" or "inward" imagery, vague as those terms are.

The work is highly original. Take for instance the print "Softly for Falling". In this picture we could be seeing snow falling in the heavily embossed areas sprinkled carefully throughout the central image. On the other hand we could be seeing a heavily-seeded fruit or even a pattern on a lacy curtain. There can be really a richness of associations here, as the work has great evocative power.

This print is obviously produced by the most painstaking and careful sort of method, a kind of handmade treasure which one rarely sees any more. Color etching is in fact not a common printmaking method, and its possibilities as displayed here are quite striking.

Amidst the many associations made possible by the print "Softly for Falling" it becomes difficult to see the sources of the original inspiration; and this is as it should be. That is, one might think of the shifting hues of the sky, the opulent color of Matisse, or the pattern-work of East Indian fabrics, yet the conception presented finally in the print is too unique to be pinned to any one source such as these.

Ultimately the work, in other words, seems too personal for comparisons with other arts, or even aspects of the natural world.

Helen Piddington's small prints are very choice. Again, these are color etchings. Delicate and careful in their workmanship, they seem to have the hardness of cut and polished stone mined in strange parts of the earth.

Some works, like the striking "Island for the Nono" and "L' Oeil Absent Ne Peut Choisir", while printed flat, remind one somehow of three-dimensional sculptural works of a strange material.

The surface textures of these prints are sometimes silken and sometimes grainy, with an almost oriental kind of brushwork. (the printing plate is brushed with an acid which cuts a printable stroke into the metal). Some of the prints are highly calligraphic.

The older prints from her last year's show are here in portfolio, and these should be seen too; they have an incredible opulence of color. Should the reader not have time to catch the present show before it is taken down, the newer works will also be available permanently at the Print Gallery in portfolios which may be perused at any time.

One guesses that these works do attain a profundity which may be slow in gaining recognition, but will remain satisfying for a long time once something of their essence is grasped.

Noddy in Toyland

Noddy in Toyland, a special stage adaptation of the popular Enid Blyton books, will be presented by Bebe Eversfield's School of Theatrical Arts at McPherson Playhouse late in May.

Children's International Summer Villages' organization is sponsoring the production and proceeds will assist four 11-year-old Vancouver Island children to attend this summer's International Village at Hexham, England.

A music and dance production, Noddy in Toyland will feature in the cast of over 200, Jerry Gosley, Roy Silver, Ginnie Lefevre, Pamela Trueman, Cam Connolly and Lana Check.

Special musical numbers have been written for the show by Chet Lambertson.

The program will also include a premiere performance of an original work by pianist Peter Williams. This is a symbolic creation of "The Now," consisting of contemporary moods of music and dance of today and tomorrow.

Dates for the production are May 27-29.

FRIDAY, APRIL 10, 1970

Deeply rooted in antiquity, the "promised land" today is indeed a new Israel . . . dramatically changed geographically, its deserts abloom, schools multiplying, industry booming. Yet problems and dangers remain. Israel's grip is fragile. Not even its own boundaries are certain. It stands surrounded by enemies on all sides, and well beyond. But there are admirers, too.

Glamor Issues Take Clouting

NEW YORK (AP)—The New York stock market, ambling listlessly in slow trading, wound up this week just about where it started.

About the only major development was that the formerly high-flying glamor issues took a clouting.

Analysts said this apparently was due to investors' concern about the dim outlook for corporate profits, which has been a major market depressant.

Even though the market as a whole was generally stagnant, some brokers viewed the situation as not discouraging after the 27-point gain by the Dow Jones industrial average the previous week on a decline in interest rates.

Some said the market's firmness indicated a consolidation phase which could lead to a sustained advance.

The only sessions in which there was some action were Monday and Wednesday.

For the week, the Dow industrials edged up 0.79 to 791.74. The Associated Press 60-stock averaged added .9 at 279.7. The New York Stock Exchange index of some 1,200 common stocks dipped 0.33 to 49.70. Standad and Porr's 500-stock index was off .53 to 89.39.

Bond Prices Firm

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian bond market ended the week on the firm side, closing higher in active trading Friday.

Most issues were up fractionally over last week.

The average yield on the three-month Government of Canada treasury bills ended a two-month decline when they rose to 7.02 per cent Thursday. Friday, however, they slipped back to 6.99 per cent.

Next week's offering of three-month treasury bills will be increased to $130,000,000, up $5,000,000 from the present offering.

Royal Trust Mortgage introduced a new issue Wednesday totalling $15,000,000.

The 9½-per-cent, April 15, 1976 and April 15, 1980, issue is now selling at par.

Day-to-day money closed Friday at 6¾ per cent, the lowest rate of the week.

Three-and six-month treasury bills traded at 6.99 and 6.70 per cent respectively.

Bond prices continued to be supported during March as interest rates eased and average yields on debentures declined.

The 40-bond average yield reported by McLeod, Young, Weir and Co. Ltd. dropped .08 per cent from February, which in turn was down from January, but at 9.35 per cent was still 1.05 per cent higher than March 1969.

The biggest change was in the municipal group which dropped .12 per cent to 9.63 per cent; provincials fell .1 per cent to 9.21 per cent; utilities .06 to 9.32 per cent, and industrials .04 to 9.24 per cent.

Canadian Markets Ride Waves of Rate Cut

By NICK FERRIS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Canadian stock markets moved ahead moderately this week, riding the waves of last week's prime lending rate reductions in the United States.

Markets rose sharply late last week after several large American financial institutions cut their prime rates to eight per cent from 8½.

A drop in prime rates — the interest charged to a bank's best customers — could mark the easing of tight monetary conditions that have depressed markets since last June.

Canadian markets were strong Tuesday following removal of a temporary restriction on the outflow of short-term Canadian funds imposed last July and stiffened in January.

Louis Rasminsky, central bank governor, said Monday the bank was withdrawing a special request made last July to Canadian financial institutions, limiting the volume of funds being lent abroad in form of swapped deposits.

Swapped deposits are funds converted into foreign currency, usually U.S. dollars, which have been placed on term deposit with a bank and which the bank has undertaken through a forward contract to convert back into Canadian dollars at maturity.

The swapped deposit technique becomes attractive when foreign interest is high, providing a better return than that of a domestic instrument.

When the temporary ceiling on swapped deposits was announced last July, the Bank of Canada bank rate was increased one-half point to a record eight per cent at the same time.

There was no mention of a reduction in the bank rate this week, but some observers expect a reduction could come within a few months.

A Bank of Canada bank rate cut would be followed by a prime rate reduction and would loosen the federal government's stranglehold on monetary conditions, imposed to fight inflation.

Canadian markets advanced for three consecutive sessions after the removal of the swapped deposits restrictions before dropping back Friday.

Statistically, on index at the Toronto Stock Exchange, the industrial index rose 1.18 to 185.52, golds 14.75 to 173.86, base metals 4.68 to 117.51 and western oils 1.82 to 195.59.

Volume was 11,286,000 shares comparedd with 10,202,000 last week. Gains outnumbered losses 436 to 311 with 243 issues unchanged.

On the Montreal and Canadian exchanges, the composite index was up 3.36 to 183.26. Combined volume was 7,364,000 shares compared wity 5,111,000 last week.

Supertankers Studied

FREDERICTON (CP) — An expansion program that would make it possible to build mamoth supertankers in New Brunswick is under consideration at the Saint John Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. Ltd.

The announcement was made Friday by the shipyard president, industrialist K. C. Irvin, when he appeared before the legislature's corporations committee to oppose a bill that would give MacMillan Rothesay Ltd. Pulp and Paper Mill of Saint John power to expropriate land with approval of the New Brunswick cabinet.

No decision had been made to proceed, Mr. Irving said, but if carried out, the shipyard expansion would allow construction of ships in excess of 200,000 tons.

The program had been under consideration for the last "six months or so," he said.

Young man with 5 years' office experience in wholesale fine paper. Experienced in staff supervision, selling, invoicing, purchasing, order desk, inventory control, costing and warehousing, requires employment. Have references Please reply Victoria Press, Box 107.

Cadillac, Aabro

Cadillac Explorations Ltd. of Calgary and Aabro Mining and Oils Ltd. of Vancouver have signed a joint agreement to mill copper at Greenwood, to start running in June.

Aabro was constructing the 2,000-ton mill, until it was forced to close down last year after a $250,000 loan was recalled.

Cadillac will provide $1.35 million as part of the agreement to liquidate Aabro's debts and purchase additional equipment, becoming a full partner with Aabro in a company called Greyhound Mines Ltd.

Pacific Western

Pacific Western Airlines Ltd. had net earnings of $524,000 for the year ended Dec. 31, 1969, compared with $285,000 for 1968.

YOUR TAXES

By I. H. ASPER

Trade-Off Gains Solid Support

There appears to be growing support for the proposition that if the government's capital gains tax proposal is adopted then estate tax should be eliminated. Many professional commentators are now advocating this trade-off. Its acceptability appeared evident from corridor comment from tax practitioners at last week's Conference of the Canadian Tax Foundation.

Supporters of this tax reform compromise argue that a capital gains tax is simply prepaid estate tax anyway and to levy it twice would be unfair. While the logic of that case is not without its fallacies, the government would certainly defuse a great deal of the white paper controversy by making that gesture. The revenue loss would not be significant.

It will likely be some time before the government declares its final position on the matter, and in the meantime, taxpayers must continue to plan their affairs on the basis of existing tax rules. In the field of estate planning, a recent judgment of the Tax Appeal Board has once again highlighted a controversial issue in estate tax law. The board's ruling will be interesting to those who buy accident insurance.

GENERAL TERMS

The present estate tax law provides in general terms that when one dies tax must be paid on the value of any asset that passes to someone as a result of his death. The law then goes on to spell out in some detail just what the phrase "property passing" means in various circumstances.

Since 1959, when the Estate Tax was introduced, the courts have given many interpretations of the law as it applies in specific circumstances. For instance, it is well established that as regards life insurance proceeds collected on one's death, they will be fully taxed if the deceased owned the policy himself.

It is also now well settled that if one doesn't wish to pay estate tax on the life insurance, he simply arranges that the policy is owned by someone else, say a trust for his wife and children. The family head may make cash gifts to his intended beneficiaries who use the money to pay the premiums.

The law hasn't been as clear with respect to the tax treatment of death benefits paid under an accident insurance policy. Cautiousness has led many advisers to the conclusion that an accident policy is like a life insurance policy — if the deceased paid the premiums, estate tax will be levied.

COMPLICATIONS

This creates complications for the would-be estate planner. Whenever he travels and buys accident insurance at the airport he must go through the cumbersome steps of getting the premium money from his family and so on, if he wants the proceeds to escape tax.

The fears of the overly cautious were calmed somewhat in 1964 when the Tax Appeal Board made its first ruling on the subject. One of the victims of the St. Therese Air Canada crash had an accidental death policy which was collected after the fatal accident. His executors argued that the insurance proceeds weren't taxable on his death because the Estate Tax Act speaks only of taxing life insurance proceeds and an accident insurance payment is not the same thing.

The Tax Appeal Board then, speaking through R. S. W. Rodham, QC advanced the understanding of the law by ruling the executors were correct. If Parliament had intened accidental death insurance proceeds to be taxed, it would have said so, but in no event could the revenue department succeed by saying that such a policy was akin to a life insurance policy.

Fordham's reasoning was upheld when the tax department appealed to the Exchequer Court. That should have ended the issue.

NEW ATTACK

However, in 1968, the government attacked again. It sought to tax accidental death insurance benefits, but this time the Crown lawyers relied on a different section of the law — one which had never been judicially interpreted in Canada.

That case also came before the Tax Appeal Board but this time it was heard by a different judge. Board Member, J. O. Weldon, QC, ruled that the estate tax must be paid. In the light of the previous board decision which was upheld by the higher court, the taxpayer might have succeeded on a further appeal, but due to the illness of the beneficiary, no further appeal was launched. This left the state of the law somewhat obscured by two conflicting decisions.

A few weeks ago another case on the subject came before the Tax Appeal Board. A young doctor was killed in a car accident. He had three accident policies totalling $75,000. His estate argued that no estate tax should be paid. The government, relying on its success in the 1968 case, brought the case to the appeal board where once again, Acting Chairman Fordham, who had decided the original 1964 case, ruled that the law was now clear, that the Board was wrong in its 1968 decision, and the policy proceeds were tax free.

CONFLICT

The apparent conflict in judicial reasoning indicates how difficult it is to interpret tax law with any certainty. When two learned tax judges with many years of experience in deciphering the meaning of the law are able to give diametrically opposite judgements in cases with essentially the same facts, what reliance can a taxpayer place on the advice and opinions given him by his professional advisers.

Such a situation does not speak well for the quality of the present law. Good law must be clear, certain and unambiguous if it is to be respected. It is obviously incumbent on the government to introcuce an amendment to the Estate Tax Act clarifying once and for all whether or not accident insurance proceeds are taxable.

Until government acts, the unnecessary uncertainlty that has been with us for over six years, will remain.

Exports Register Increase

OTTAW A(CP) — The value of Canadian exports in February ran more than 12 per cent ahead of the same month in 1969, at $1,253,689, compared to $1,114,043,000 a year ago, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported Friday.

Total exports in the first two months of 1970 were 15 per cent ahead of 1969, with a value of $2,598,914,000 compared with $2,250,689,000 in January and February last year.

Gains were recorded in sales to almost all major trading partners. alue of shipments to the United States, which takes about 70 per cent of all Canadian exports, advanced at a slower rate than the total.

February exports to the United States picked up by almost six per cent to $850,168,000 from $803,657,000 a year earlier. The two-month tally was up by eight per cent to $1,726,681,000 from $1,592,852,000.

Britain, Canada's second biggest market, increased purchases to $101,102,000 in February from $88,734,000 a year earlier.

COMMISSIONER RISKS SUSPICION OF FANS . . . . . . BY REFUSING TO TELL FACTS OF DENNY'S GAMBLING INVOLVEMENT

McLain Case Disposal Breaks Bowie's Winning Streak

By SHIRLEY POVICH
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Disposition to dwell a bit on the Denny McLain affair, particularly on the fascinating behavior of the game's boss man, Bowie Kuhn. First time a baseball commissioner ever heard a player's own confession of wrongdoing and then ruled it unacceptable evidence.

McLain's avowal that he bought into that Michigan bookmaking racket as a partner was not extorted by any modern torquemada with electric prods, pitiless bright lights or the latest, improved third-degree methods. It was freely made to Kuhn himself, in the commissioner's New York office, where the rack and the wheel are unknown.

Yet six weeks later, Kuhn did not believe McLain's story in April as he did in February. The commissioner announced his own investigation had proved the player was merely under a delusion. McLain wasn't truly a partner in the racket, he merely thought he was. He had been used. So as a reminder not to keep naughty company again he was suspending McLain for three months.

That part of it, McLain getting off with a three-month wrist slap, isn't bad. There has to be compassion for a player who is stupid, and has personally described himself as such. But it is more difficult to rationalize Kuhn. Up with McLain, down with Kuhn, perhaps.

At his press conference announcing his ruling on McLain, Kuhn ducked the important questions. How did he determine the player was not actually a partner of the Michigan hoods? The commissioner merely would say it was "on the basis of various sources of information available to me."

That was all he was going to tell the press and radio-TV people, Kuhn said. When they protested "but you haven't told us what the evidence is," the commissioner said "nor am I going to." In a press conference that lasted nearly 40 minutes, Kuhn persisted in his public-be-damned stance, with his refusal to tell the facts of McLain's admitted involvement with gamblers.

This was pompous behavior by the baseball commissioner, who, at the time he was asking the fans to believe he was protecting the integrity of the game, was in effect telling them that most of the facts of the McLain case were none of their business.

It was hardly the new commissioner's finest hour. By withholding the facts of the McLain case, he invited the suspicion that full disclosure might not completely support his gentle punishment of McLain. It was scarcely the way to win public confidence in his stewardship of the game that is paying him $100,000 a year to police it and maintain fan faith.

There was need for Kuhn to recognize that he was asking the public to overcome its own great surprise when he announced he had turned up evidence contrary to McLain's own confession he was a partner of the bookies. In effect, he was asking the nation's baseball fans to lay aside any doubts and buy him on faith, and to hell with the public's right to know.

Lawyer Kuhn wasn't at his brightest, either, when he attempted to rationalize his light punishment of McLain by pointing out that McLain had failed in his effort to become a partner of the bookies. He equated it with "the difference between murder and attempted murder," as if trying to throw a baseball game and failing was less sinful than putting in the fix and succeeding.

There was another element in Kuhn's handling of the McLain decision that smacked of a defensive posture, as if he invited support from a higher authority. He let it be known, and how clever that may have been, that at the White House on Tuesday he had told President Nixon that McLain would be grounded for three months. "The president thought it was fair," said Kuhn.

With his disposal of the McLain case, the new commissioner broke his winning streak. Kuhn had shown high promise when he came into the office in January, 1969, and quickly began to roll up points. He settled masterfully the Donn Clendenon "retirement" that jeopardized the big Houston-Montreal player deal. He eased the threatened spring-training boycott of the players, and later sweet-talked Ken Harrelson into reporting to Cleveland, thereby saving the deal with the Red Sox.

But Kuhn has not distinguished himself with his secretive management of the Danny McLain mess. It was his first bobble, but a big one. Any more of this kind, and he could win recognition as the greatest commissioner since Gen. William Eckert, his immediate predecessor.

Bill WALKER

To whom it may concern. It's true. Horse racing's first recorded triple dead heat took place at the Willows Park in 1941. Or would you care to slip down memory lane for another stroll?

In the post was a missive from R. C. Gaunt. Speed skating was his avocation at one time and in that regard he has some iinteresting views as skating affects hockey.

It is his contention that the so-called "stepover" style of skating provides a hockey player with better control than the parallel method. The example put forth is that a player circling the net and carrying the puck and skating with his skates in parallel position, i.e., side by side, is more easily upset. The slightest touch on the inside skate with an oponent's stick, will send him sprawling. In the "step-over" style balance is better maintained, speed is more easily sustained, and a player can turn sharply with great power and be away again, Guant contends.

He points out, too, that the Bentley brothers were disciples of this style, which probably accounted for their dipsy-doodle tactics and evasive style. And they did all right.

So why not take a good look at the skating in the next NHL game. The comparative styles should prove interesting. The reasoning certainly is sound enough.

While In Saskatoon on a recent visit, Gaunt also had occasion to visit another Victorian of many years ago. Norman Hec Fowler was a member of the Victoria Cougars in 1919-20 season and also in '23 and '24. There have been other stops along the road for Hec since then but some may recall one of the more noteworthy. He was coach of the Saskatoon Quakers who won the western Canada championship in the 1932-33 Allan Cup playdowns.

Fowler recalled one incident, Guant writes, which showed that the old-timers had as much zilch as the youngsters of today. It was when Lester Patrick was running the Victoria team, and brother Frank was in charge of the Vancouver club.

One night after a particularly bitter game, and as the players were leaving the dressing room, they were stopped short by a fight in front of the dressing-room door.

It wouldn't have been that unusual, except that it was Lester and Frank who were going at it, hammer and tong, on the floor.

Then there was the recent meeting of the Middlesex (Rugby) tour committee. But there won't be any publicity on it because the publicity chairman didn't make it. Well, actually, he made it, to the door, where he got his no-no. The meeting, called by Dave MacKenzie, was at the Union Club, and the PR type had cut short a fishing trip in order to attend. But when he got to the lobby, he also got the message, politely. No jacket, no tie, no meeting. Instead, he went home and had a scotch ... or as he said: "chip, chip, and tally ho, wot!" Incidentally, those needing, rugby tickets can get them from Jim Hume. He was the fellow wearing the windbreaker with Velox on it, and no fish.

And I must have missed the item. But it still bears repeating. It is well known that the New York Rangers have been having their problems recently. But a short while ago they were magnified in an unusual fashion because of the air controllers' slowdown.

With the club Montreal bound, manager Emile Francis had ordered a bus to stand by at the Air Canada terminal in case there was a cancellation, or delay, in the flight.

There was, so the Rangers decided to bus it. The bus arrived, complete with driver, and a girl, about 19.

"Who's that?" said Francis. "That's my wife and she's going to Montreal to visit relatives," the driver replied.

"Not in this bus," Francis snapped.

"Okay," said the driver, "I'll drop her off on the way to Manhattan."

The bus was loaded and the 7½ hour journey to Montreal began. Soon afterwards, the driver turned off the expressway, and a few minutes later, the bus stopped. The girl and driver departed "to get her a taxi."

Fifteen minutes later, Francis jumped out of his seat. "Where's the driver? What's gong on here?" he yelled.

"Rats deserting a sinking ship," said winger Dave Balon.

Half an hour went by and there still was no driver. The players adjourned to a nearby delicatessen. Francis phoned the bus company. Yes, they could supply another driver. The new driver arrived, but he had just come off duty and couldn't work more than a eight-hour shift. So he took the bus back to the garage.

A third driver, who was on his day off, took over, causing Francis to quip:

"This is the first time I ever had to call up a driver under emergency conditions."

However, Balon may have been closer to the truth.

The Rangers may find out tonight. They never did get to talk to the original driver.

Long Lines at Wickets as Milwaukee Baseball Fans Rush for Tickets

Crush at Wickets For Brewer Tickets

MILWAUKEE (AP)—Major league baseball returns to County Stadium Tuesday afternoon when Milwaukee Brewers meet California Angels.

It was just 17 years ago that the first franchise shift in the major leagues in more than 50 years occurred. That was when Boston Braves packed up and left Beantown for this brewery capital.

Now, the Seattle Pilots are coming in from the other direction.

Brewers officials are estimating 30,000 or more fans will be at County Stadium Tuesday. More than 1,000 season tickets were sold Thursday, the first day they could be purchased. Single-game tickets for Tuesday and Wednesday went on sale Friday morning.

Allan H. (Bud) Selig, president of the Brewers, announced that the response at the ticket office has been absolutely overwhelming. The demand has picked up over Thursday.

SALES BOOMING

Selig said he didn't know how many tickets had been sold early Friday, but he described the activity at the ticket windows at County Stadium as "a wild, wild scene."

"It's quite obvious that Milwaukee is as happy as the Brewers to have baseball back," Selig said.

The players will arrive Sunday night and plans are being made for a huge welcoming crowd.

The Brewers came into being at 11:30 p.m., EST, Tuesday, when bankruptcy referee Sidney C. Volinn announced his decision approving the sale of the American League Pilots to the Milwaukee Brewers for $10,800,000.

GOOD YOUNG TALENT

Milwaukee fans will have a one-year-old team to root for, yet one that has good, young talent.

Second baseman Tommy Harper led the American League in stolen bases last season, swiping 73.

First-year manager Dave Bristol said only four positions were set on the club with first baseman Mike Hegan, shortstop Ted Kubiak and catcher Jerry McNertney joining Harper in the starting lineup.

However, Bristol said he has decided on a pitching rotation of Lew Krausse, Gene Brabender, Marty Pattin, George Lauzerique and Bob Bolin. All are righthanders, and only Pattin and Brabender, a Wisconsin native, were with the Pilots last season.

It is felt Milwaukee's spacious stadium will help the Brewers immensely. Last season, playing in Seattle's little park, the pitchers all became shell-shocked.

Another added incentive are those Milwaukee fans, the ones who lifted the Braves from a seventh-place finish in 1952, the team's last season in Boston, to second place in 1953.

Gay Trip Wins 'Chase; Only 7 Horses Finish

AINTREE, England (AP) — Pat Taaffe, 40-year-old Irish jockey and the oldest rider in the race, today steered eight-year-old Gay Trip to victory in the 126th running of the Grand National.

American-owned Vulture was second, trailing the winner by 20 lengths, with Miss Hunter third half a length away in this race rated the toughest steeplechase in the world.

Twenty-eight horses started in the four-mile 856-yard race over 30 tough obstacles and only seven finished.

Gay Trip, owned by Englishman Alan Chambers, was a 15-to-1 shot and so was Vulture, owned by Gen. R. K. Mellon of Ligonier, Pa., with Miss Hunter 33 to 1. American-owned Dozo was fourth at 100 to 8.

The race was worth £14,804 ($34,480) to the winner. The second-placed horse won £4,486, the third £2,193 and the fourth £1,046.

Record-Wrecker Selected Canada

WINNIPEG (CP)—Byron MacDonald, a 19-year-old from Chicago who decided he would rather swim for Canada than the United States, led the assault on the record book during the second day of the Canadian indoor winter nationals and Commonwealth Games trials.

MacDonald set one of four records Friday and stole the spotlight as he also bettered the existing Commonwealth Games record in the 100-metre butterfly by one-half second with a time of 57.6 seconds.

Canada's top female swimmer, Angela Coughlan of Burlington, Ont., set her second record in as many days, pacing herself to a 4:34.8 clocking in the 400-metre freestyle. Her former record was 4:35.6.

Vancouver's Sylvia Dockerill, who saw her 200-metre breaststroke record of 2:54.5 fall in the morning heats, regained her top ranking with a time of 2:53.2.

The fourth record to fall was the women's 800-metre freestyle relay.

Ralph Hutton, Campbell River, B.C., and Sue Smith of Edmonton didn't set any records Friday but both swimmers won their second event of the competition. Hutton won the 400-metre freestyle in 4:12 and Miss Smith the 100-metre butterfly in 1:07.5.

Holding of a dual American-Canadian citizenship since he was born in the U.S. but has Canadian parents, MacDonald said he made his decision to swim for Canada mainly because he felt he "could achieve my goals sooner."

Ranked third in the U.S. in the butterfly event, MacDonald was eligible to try for the U.S. international teams until he entered the Canadian championships.

Computer Reckons 125 Possibilities

By The Canadian Press

If the mood of Toronto Maple Leaf players is anything like that of their coach, Boston Bruins tonight should have an easy time eliminating their 4½-year-old jinx.

The Bruins haven't won a National Hockey League regular season game at Maple Leaf Gardens since Nov. 27, 1965. But with their hopes for the East Division title depending on a sweep of their weekend home-and-home series with the Leafs, the Bruins aren't likely to let old records dampen their desire.

And judging from coach Johnny McLellan's mood, the Leafs will be hard-pressed to stop the Boston squad, either tonight or Sunday in Boston.

After supervising the Leafs' last season practice Friday, McLellan admitted he had taken on an impossible task trying to make a contender of the team that will finish last, some 20 or more points out of the playoffs.

"There's no way to win with this team, not even with God as coach," said McLellan.

NO SURE THING

But even with victories in both weekend games, the Bruins are not guaranteed of finishing first, any more than Oakland Seals are sure of gaining a playoff berth in the West.

The tight East race contains 125 different possibilities for the final standings after Sunday's games, according to a computer study made by the NHL New York office. The only constant in all 125 possible endings is that Toronto will be last, the computer reported.

The Seals scored a 4-1 victory over last-place Los Angeles Kings to break out of a tie with Minnesota North Stars and into another tie with Philadelphia Flyers. The North Stars, with a game tonight at Philadelphia and another Sunday at Pittsburgh against the Penguins, could still pull ahead of both the Flyers and Seals who each have only one game remaining.

But the Seals would have to lose their last game tonight at Los Angeles, the Flyers and North Stars would have to tie their game and Minnesota would have to win at Pittsburgh to eliminate Oakland from the playoff picture.

The second-place Penguins visit the first-place St. Louis Blues tonight in the other remaining West Division action.

The Bruins' hopes for the East title also rest on a loss or tie by Chicago Black Hawks who wind up with a home-and-home series against Montreal Canadiens, starting tonight in Montreal. The Canadiens and Detroit Red Wings also are within range of the top spot.

The Hawks are tied with Bruins at 95 points, followed by Detroit at 93, Montreal at 92 and New York Rangers at 90. Detroit and New York face off in the other home-and-home series starting tonight in Detroit.

A crowd of 9,964 fans at Oakland Friday saw Earl Ingarfield score twice for the Seals with single goals by Gary Jarrett and Bob Dillabough.

It was the 52nd loss of the season for the Kings.

Carpenter's Job

ELIZABETH, N.J. (CP) — Ken Carpenter, former coach of Saskatchewan Roughriders has signed as coach of Jersey Tigers, a new entry in the Continental League.

Campbell Delays Verdict on Green

BOSTON (UPI) — Ted Green has been pronounced medically fit to resume playing professional hockey. But he won't be on the ice.

Boston Bruins announced Friday that Green, who suffered a fractured skull during a pre-season stick fight with Wayne Maki of St. Louis, had been given a clean bill of health by doctors at Massachusetts General Hospital.

But the troubles for the rugged defenceman are not over yet.

He faces court in Ottawa next Tuesday on a charge of common assault arising from the Maki brawl.

National Hockey League president Clarence Campbell has denied a Boston request that would have returned Green to the Bruins' roster as of last Wednesday.

Campbell said the official checkup would be held next Tuesday, the same day as Green's court appearance.

Following the Boston examination earlier this week, the club wired Campbell for permission to put Green on the roster so he could begin serving a 13-game suspension imposed by the league president following the stick fight.

But Campbell ruled that the examination by a Boston physician did not fulfill the conditions he set at the time of the suspension.

Entry limited to 160, based on low handicaps. Qualifying round (18 holes) at Uplands Golf Club on Sunday, April 19.

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Arnold Palmer is 40 years old but he is still the greatest attraction golf has known and he still gets the job done.

The game's all-time leading money winner fashioned a sparkling first-round 64, seven under par, and was tied for top spot with Tommy Aaron going into today's second round in the $180,000 Greater Greensboro open golf tournament.

Palmer drew a galloping herd of fans from the huge gallery of about 15,000 and responded to their urging of "Go, Arnie, go" with a brilliant effort.

Palmer and Aaron, who has finished second nine times and scored his only victory last year in the then-unofficial Canadian Open, held a single-stroke lead over R. H. Sikes.

THREE AT 66

Masters champion George Archer, Phil Rodgers and San Diego Open titleholder Pete Brown were at 66, with Lou Graham and Bob Menne, the tour sophomore who forced Lee Trevino to a playoff before losing in last week's National Airlines, tied at 67.

Winnipeg's Wilf Homenuik, with a 39-30—69, led the Canadian contingent. Al Balding of Toronto was another stroke back at 33-37—70 and George Knudson of Toronto withdrew after shooting 37-41—78.

"I was hitting my irons pretty good," Palmer said, "But I've been hitting them pretty good for a while. Actually, it was getting a couple of putts to drop that kind of got me going.

IT ALL HELPS

"I had about a 25-footer on the second, and, well, you might say I charged it a little. I ran it about 15 feet past and made it coming back.

"On the next one, it was about 20 feet and I played just a little cautious. I left it 10 feet short, then made it. That kind of helped."

He birdied the next three holes, putting a seven iron four feet from the flag, canning an eight footer and two-putting a par five that he reached in two.

He also ran in a 25-footer, reached another par five in two and had irons shots that left him birds of two, one and 2½ feet. He went over par once on the eighth, where he hit a tree.

Aaron had an eagle three on the 14th, with a seven-foot putt, twice chipped in for birdies, put irons inside six feet three times and made one 10-foot putt. He went over par once when he missed the green on the 16th.

Entries Roll In For Island Open

Things are shaping up.

Entries for the Vancouver Island Open match-play golf championships continue to flow in and, almost assuredly, a limit-attaining field of 160 golfers will tee off for the qualifying round on April 19.

Deadline for entry is April 12 and tournament secretary Leo Derman's total-in-hand passed the 100 mark on Friday.

With more to come, the array of entrants already is imposing.

Among the early entries received are those from former champions Bill McColl and Laurie Kerr; professional Bill Court of Colwood, a former finalist; Bob Hunt, a plus-one handicap amateur from Uplands, and former finalists Al MacLeod and Vince Clarkson.

INTERMEDIATE HOPES

Also looming tall among the list of prospective challengers are a flock of the city's talented young amateurs. They included most of the select group of under-25 golfers who play off this weekend for the new "intermediate" championship and the Freddy Burns Memorial Trophy.

The intermediate championship, a 36-hole affair, got underway this morning at Colwood and will wind up Sunday at Victoria Golf Club.

Among the young belters competing for both the intermediate title and the Island Open championship, sponsored by The Daily Times, are Carl Schwantje, Ken Floyd, Mike Gray and Ron Howard, Jr.

The Times Open event gets under way with the April 19 qualifying round at Uplands. Match play progresses around the district's major 18-hole courses — Glen Meadows, Colwood, Gorge Vale and Victoria Club — before returning to Uplands for the May 24 final.

The Times Open entry form is published above.

Faulty Footwork Fractures Frazier

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — World heavyweight champion Joe Frazier fractured his right ankle during an enthusiastic dance in his night club act on the Las Vegas Strip, it was disclosed Friday.

The Philadelphia boxer was taken to hospital late Thursday night and the injured ankle was placed in a cast when the break was discovered.

A spokesman for Smokin' Joe said the injury occurred during his first show in the lounge of Caesars Palace where he is appearing with his rock group, The Knockouts.

He was dancing about the stage in time to the music and apparently placed his weight on the wrong leg, a member of the group said. Frazier finished the show and did the entire second show an hour later.

Later the ankle swollen, Frazier was taken in a wheel chair out of the hotel and removed to hospital.

A hospital aide said the break was in "good position" and should heal well. Frazier, the hotel announced, will return to the lounge for the two Sunday night shows but will sing from a wheel chair. His group will go it alone though Saturday night.

Million-Dollar Pact for Lacey

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — Sam Lacey, a six-foot-10-inch centre who starred for three years at New Mexico State, Friday signed a five-year contract with a reported $1,100,000 with Cincinnati Royals of the National Basketball Association.

Cincinnati officials declined to disclose the terms of the contract or the amount, but a source close to Lacey quoted the $1,100,000 figure.

Overtime Victory For Powell River

POWELL RIVER (CP) — Ray Schultz' goal in the second, sudden-death overtime period Friday night gave Powell River Regals a 7-6 victory over Lloydminster Kings and a 1-0 lead in the best-of-five Western Canada intermediate hockey semi-final series.

Motorbike Event Scheduled Sunday

At least 10 riders from Vancouver and a few invaders from Port Angeles are scheduled to join local and up-Island throttle-twisters Sunday in one of the major events of the Victoria Motorcycle Club season.

They'll be competing at 1:30 p.m. in the club's annual spring invitational motocross scramble at Blink Bonnie Farm, about one mile north of Saanichton Fairgrounds.

Saints, Gordon Head Display Winning Style

First United Saints took the most imposing steps forward Friday as Victoria-area teams made their moves toward British Columbia minor basketball championships.

Teams from Gordon Head and Cordova Bay also were very much in contention in tournaments being staged at Victoria High, Salmon Arm and North Vancouver.

Saints drew top seeding in the 18th annual bantam girls' tournament at North Vancouver by winning all three games in a four-team preliminary round. Victoria edged North Vancouver Sutherlands 34-33, trounced Cranbrook Trojanettes 40-16 and defeated Salmon Arm Jacks, the champions for the past six years, 41-32.

The preliminary results paired First United with fourth-ranked Cranbook while North Vancouver met Salmon Arm in this afternoon's semi-finals.

GORDON HEAD WINS

In Victoria, Gordon Head and North Vancouver posted opening round victories in the midget boys' final. Gordon Head laced Dr. Knox Trojans of Kelowna 46-14 while North Vancouver Royals dropped Victoria Boys' Club 44-12

The four-team, double-knockout tournament is scheduled to wind up tonight with games at 8 and, if necessary 9:30.

Doug Mosher, with 17 points, and John McManaman, with 14, paced Gordon Head's attack.

The evening's standout was North Vancouver's Cam Hair who popped in 30 points, including 13 field goals, against Boys' Club.

TROJANS BELTED

At Salmon Arm, host teams took the lead in the B.C. juvenile boys and girls' finals but Cordova Bay still clung to hopes of victory.

Cordova Bay, trailing 11-2 after the opening quarter, came back strongly but bowed 37-35 in the first of a two-game, total-point series for the girls' title.

Victoria's Metropolitan Trojans were less optimistic in the boys' playoff, after suffering a 90-38 setback to the slick Salmon Arm Gems.

Both juvenile series wind up tonight.

Laver Keeps Tennis Title

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Rod Laver, recovering from a slow start which cost him the first set, trounced South Africa's Frew McMillan to win the South African Open tennis championship Friday.

The Australian lefthander blasted McMillan off the court in the last three sets to win, 4-6, 6-2, 6-1, 6-2, and retain the title.

The victory earned Laver $5,600. McMillan collected $3,500.

Foster Risks Title

MISSOULA, Mont. (AP) — Light-heavyweight boxing champion Bob Foster of Washington, D.C., risks his world title here tonight when he meets seventh-ranked Roger Rouse of Anaconda, Mont.

SWINGER Nanette Fabray (above) appears as a lady who really digs the action, in the mystery-drama Jigsaw, Monday at 9 on Channel 5. A 1968 production, it's got much to commend it.

RANDOM NOTES FOR WATCHING TV

By WALTER McKINNON

Uncle Montgomery is convinced this is the year Gunga Din will be named top picture. He's cancelled his Tuesday night boomerang lesson so he can watch the Academy Awards.

I tried to tell him it wasn't even nominated but he said he's been waiting since 1939 and he has great faith in the American tradition of write-in candidates.

I pointed out that sort of thing usually only happens during presidential primaries, but Montgomery claimed I was being narrow-minded.

Personally, I don't have very high hopes for Gunga Din. But I've got to admit Montgomery's loyal. He served during the Punjab campaign back in '94 and Kipling's just fine with him.

Here's a bit of good news for anybody who got hooked on Forsyte Saga when it was running on Channel 9. The CBC has signed for the 26-part dramatization of John Galsworthy's Forsyte Saga.

Sunday is the first episode and you'll meet the Forsytes toward the end of the 19th century, wracked by scandals and heartbreak behind the facade of money, possessions and security.

It's a vital episode in the series and the series is worthy of highest praise, so make a point of seeing it . . . even if it means skipping Bonanza completely. It's at 9 on Channels 2 and 6.

TONIGHT

Family Viewing Department

Back with the Honeymooners (7 p.m., Channel 8; 7:30, Channels 7 and 12), vintage Jackie Gleason, for more of Ralph Kramden's inane, backfiring inspirations. This time he's got his eyes on a promotion to the job of traffic manager, so he forces his co-workers to fork over five dollars apiece for a costly gift for his boss's daughter, buys it at a high class jewelry store, and send it home, where Alice assumes it's her birthday gift. Fans who've been watching the "Honeymooners" since it started will get a bang out of Pert Kelton, the original Alice, who plays Ralph's belligerent mother-in-law tonight.

Brother Andy (Andy Williams, 7:30 p.m., Channel 5) plays for the kids, the Smothers Brothers appear in bits all through the hour, and talented Judy Collins and Gary Puckett and The Union Gap perform. Tom and Dick Smothers sing and rib each other until Dickie decides to go on his own, working with a bear instead of his brother. Miss Collins sings "Who Knows Where the Time Goes"; Andy and the Osmond Brothers revive "Peg of My Heart"; and the Union Gap plays "Who Can I Turn To?"

Violence on TV Department

A potential killer scientist (DEPARTMENT S, 10 p.m., Channel 6) has the investigators in a race against time. The man has enough lethal gas in his possession to wipe out a million people . . . and he intends to use it.

MANNIX (10 p.m., Channel 7). An hour on the show's back lot—Paramount Studios—where the private eye tries to protect a western star from murder. The story makes good use of the movie lot, particularly in its climactic chase scenes with Mannix hopping about on catwalks. Actor Bob Conrad plays a heel, the western star, and he's excellent, taking from everybody and displaying his boxing prowess enough to make yes-men out of his friends.

SUNDAY

For Kids and Disney Buffs

"THE HOUND THAT THOUGHT HE WAS A RACCOON" (6 p.m., Channel 2; 7:30, Channel 5) is a charming nature tale, vintage 1964, for kids and grownups alike. It tells the story about a pup who is brought up in the woods by a raccoon, and returns to the woods hunting coons for humans much later in his life. A fine Disney animal show, and that's a compliment hard to beat.

Regular Fare Department

ED SULLIVAN (8 p.m., Channels 2, 6, 7 and 12) offers a variety of song styles as western singers Roy Rogers and Dale Evans, popular singer George Hamilton, the rock group called the Temptations, and vocalist Marilyn Maye perform. On the comedy front, John Byner and Gene Baylos handle the monologues of the hour, and the tumbling Canestrellis contribute a novelty act.

GLEN CAMPBELL HOUR (9 p.m., Channel 7). Bob Newhart, Cher and songwriter Neil Diamond fill the bill with Glen. Newhart talks about catering to the Pilgrims, does a monologue on a small town dial-a-service operator, and plays dad meeting daughters' young man in a sketch with Glen and Cher. In the music department, Cher and Glen try "All I Really Want To Do," and Neil Diamond joins them both for a finale of his creations like "Solitary Man" and "Kentucky Woman."

Goodbye, Bronson . . . You Hang In There, Now

By LAWRENCE LAURENT

WASHINGTON (WP) "... There went Bronson."

This is the epitaph for what promised to be the brightest, most attractive and most popular series of the 1969-70 season. Instead, it was one-season failure, a financial disaster and a personal disappointment to several of the executives at the National Broadcasting Co.

In television, the distance from August to April is a lifetime. In August, a NBC executive was explaining that "Bronson" couldn't miss. It was supposed to follow the success of "Easy Rider," for, after all, the public had demonstrated its admiration of drifters who ride motorcycles.

"Young people don't want traditional storylines," he said. "Young people don't want traditional motivations."

The young, he explained, are those viewers between the ages of 10 and 34.

"Bronson" didn't talk much. He didn't react in the usual dramatic terms. "Hang in there, now," for Bronson, was a long speech. This — in August — was a plus for the series. The expert explained "TV doesn't have much mystery. It is too graphic. In the new style, you must never tell the audience things that it can figure out for itself."

NBC's programming vice-president, Mort Werner, said that after viewing the feature-length version of " . . . Then Came Bronson," he couldn't get the character out of his mind. This was supposed to mean that "Bronson" had impact and that the audience wouldn't be able to resist tuning in the show every Wednesday at 10 p.m.

Then there was Michael Parks, long known as "one of the most promising young actors in Hollywood." He was compared, endlessly, to the late James Dean, and praises were sung to his style of "non-communicative" acting.

To admirers of the non-communicative school, the actor who never changes expression and who never varies his "I could care less" style of speech provides the audience with a wonderful opportunity. The audience is supposed to work harder than the actor, for, by so doing, they will find deep significance, startling revelations and superb insights into the character.

Such theories are based on Marshall McLuhan's nonsense that all literature from Edgar Allen Poe to Philip Roth is a "do-it-yourself-kit" for the reader. Again, the audience is expected to work much harder than the creator of entertainment.

All this was in August.

By September, some doubts had begun to arise. Visually, " . . . Then Came Bronson" was the most beautiful program in all television. Long overhead shots of the motorcycle rolling down the highways of the American West were absolutely stunning.

The show was often compared to "Route 66", which had two Picaro heroes who roamed the nation in a sports car. By October, "Bronson" was being called, kindly, "Route 66' of a Motorcycle" and, unkindly, "Route 33."

By November, "Bronson" had fallen well behind "Hawaii Five-O" (CBS-TV) in ratings. Some executives were beginning to mutter that any actor — even Michael Parks — ought to show something more than a blank stare.

December is a dull month in television, and all viewing drops.

In January, everyone knew that "Bronson" was in deep trouble. One top NBC executive was heard to mutter: "Parks has been 'promising' long enough. When does he begin to deliver on that promise?"

By February, the word was official: "Bronson" would never come for a second TV season.

The month of March brought the news that NBC had found a replacement for "Bronson," something new in the history of television. This is "Four-In-One," which had four revolving series under that umbrella title. New? Well, not quite. In 1952, Dick Powell, David Niven, Charles Boyer and Frank Lovejoy had rotated in a dramatic anthology series called "Four Star Playhouse."

And whatever did happen to the bright promise of " . . . Then Came Bronson"? Well, for a starter, a roaming, irresponsible character on a motorcycle isn't exactly a great folk hero in that vast expanse between the Hudson River and the Santa Monica Mountains. He is more likely to be an anti-hero, bringing up images of the Hell's Angels and kids who disturb a neighborhood in the small hours of the morning.

The series suffered, further, from formless scripts and inept writing. Whatever Bronson was doing, it was never very compelling. And, finally, where was the young audience that was to be overwhelmed in such fashion that no person between 10 and 34 years could bear to miss a single episode? They were — in terms of TV's reference to massive millions — doing what they have always been doing. They were going to movies, attending classes, studying, spending time in group activities and avoiding TV as usual.

Networks keep aiming for this group and networks keep failing to get them.

Goodbye, Bronson.

You hang in there, now.

Historic Nonsuch Coming

MONTREAL (CP) — A full-size model of the ketch Nonsuch, a vessel that made history with its voyage into Hudson Bay in 1668, was shipped to Montreal Friday from London.

It will be displayed as part of the 300th anniversary celebration of the granting of the Hudson's Bay Company's charter.

The Nonsuch, its pieces swathed in canvas, was carried from London on the deck of the freighter Bristol City.

It will be unveiled Monday and taken to Sorel, Que., where she will be rigged, the mast stepped and her crew trained during the next six weeks.

The Nonsuch will be displayed in Montreal in May and June prior to a voyage up the St. Lawrence River.

MACHINE GUN KELLY, AL CAPONE BOARDED THERE

Craggy Alcatraz Lives On as Grim Relic of Sterner Days

By NORMAN CRIBBENS

Sometimes the fog creeps over San Francisco's Twin Peaks like massive clouds of cottonwool — and sometimes it sends a single tendrill down the middle of the Bay.

When visibility drops to less than five miles, a familiar trumpeting echoes across the city of a thousand hills.

What starts as a fugue for five foghorns swells into a symphony of 13 diaphones, diaphragm horns and sirens.

Of the 30 fog signals around the Bay, the loudest are the bellowing blast-and-grunt daphones that emit a two-tone "Beee-Oh" sound.

The big diaphone on Golden Gate Bridge dominates the ghostly orchestra. If the fog steals past the Gate, its basso profundo is joined by all manner of mournful sounds.

Hoots, moans, wails and grunts are heard from Point Diablo and Lime Point on the Marin shore, the south pier of Golden Gate Bridge, Alcatraz, Fisherman's Wharf and the Bay Bridge.

This dissonant chorus is maddening to insomniacs, but music to the ears of seafarers.

During a recent visit, I discovered that old salts around the Bay can identify and pinpoint the fog signals by their pitch and tonal quality.

Fog-blinded navigators, new to these waters, rely on the Pacific Coast Light List, published by the U.S. government.

MANUAL A MUST

This manual is indispensable to ships and small craft operating without the benefit of bar pilots or radar, since it interpolates the rhythmic patterns and characteristics of each signal.

Even in this automated age, it is men, not electronic devices, which control the Bay's giant jukebox. Coastguard lookouts and civilian watchmen in lighthouses, shore stations and waterfront posts keep the vigil, gauge the fog's density and flip the switches that sound the warnings.

It is estimated San Francisco's horns hoot on an average of 1,000 hours a year.

One of the city's peculiarities is that the ephemeral mists will cloak one neighborhood and not another. Often, too, it is bathed in sunlight when the foghorn blues are heard.

San Francisco's 12th Coastguard District operates 14 fog signals around the Bay. Others are independently controlled by the Navy, the San Francisco Port Authority, the Golden Gate Bridge Authority, Standard Oil and Bay Toll Crossings.

The Bay's siren song was at its best when we visited there in January, but is also heard in July, August and September.

Peering through the fog, we had our first glimpse of that grim fortress called Alcatraz — a rocky island rising 135 feet out of the tide-ripped waters of the Bay.

It holds a fascination for those who've only heard about it.

FAMILIAR SIGHT

Although it's across the water, the site of the toughest maximum security prison in the United States is within the city limits of San Francisco, and a sight as familiar to local residents as the living room wall.

The tourist bureau estimates more binoculars and cameras are trained on Alcatraz daily than on any other single building in the Bay area.

The island was named by Spanish mariner Juan Manuel de Ayala in 1775. He called it Isla de los Alcatrades or Isle of the Pelicans.

After 1885 it was successively a fortification, a U.S. military prison, an army barracks and a federal penitentiary — an isolated escarpment where for nearly a century few but the pelicans were free to come and go at will.

ESCAPE-PROOF

When the federal prisons bureau took over the island in the depression year of 1933, it was to create an escape-proof habitat for habitual lawbreakers.

According to many, the prison at Alcatraz was designed, not for rehabilitation, but solely for the punishment of incorrigible criminals.

Its star boarders in the 30s included such public enemies as Machine Gun Kelly and Scarface Al Capone. The stringent disciplinary measures taken to ensure order earned it the name Devil's Island.

Yet this severe regimen seems to have had some therapeutic effect. Al Capone, or No. 85, as he was labelled, became a "neat" cabinet maker and a "pretty fair" banjo player during his stay at Alcatraz.

Despite its grim connotations, the island has an ephemeral physical beauty. Eucalyptus trees, shrubs and flowering ice plants grow there and the waters that surround it run the gamut from green to navy blue.

And on clear nights, with floodlights creating the illusion of pink arches, the main prison building suggests a graceful Florentine loggia.

OTHER WAY ROUND

The view of the San Francisco skyline from the prison is said to be even more spectacular — but it's one few have seen and fewer want.

Maps published after the dramatic prison break on June 12, 1962 by the still-missing Frank Morris and John and Clarence Anglin place the 12-acre island a scant one and a quarter miles from the closest point in San Francisco — Fisherman's Wharf.

What makes Alcatraz so alluring to tourists?

The former prison stands on its craggy pedestal behind a curtain of secrecy as thick as the grey fog that creeps through the Golden Gate to swallow it up.

The widely-publicized escape from Alcatraz in 1962 whetted public interest in the waterbound penal colony. Many had tried to flee the Rock but all had been either killed or recaptured except for the three escapees.

PENAL REMNANT

By 1940 the United States had developed a social conscience about Alcatraz and many denounced it as a remnant of medieval penology.

Chief argument for the prison was that it served as a deterrent to dangerous criminals.

Chief argument against it was that it was too expensive to operate and that it had reached a state of serious deterioration.

In March 1963, Alcatraz was phased out as a federal penitentiary and the last of its inmates were transferred to other maximum security prisons.

So now the fog-shrouded island lives on as a grim relic of sterner times. In recent years it has been used by the U.S. Navy. Now there are rumors it may be turned into a public park. A ghostly park, methinks.

NEW SAN FRANCISCO is on the way. Tree-shaded Zellerbach Plaza on Lower Market street is the forerunner of a series of landscaped malls which will enhance San Francisco's mainstem when subway construction is completed in 1972. (Photo courtesy Convention and Visitors Bureau)

Progress Missing In Peking Talks

By ADAM KELLETT-LONG

MOSCOW (Reuters) — The Sino-Soviet border talks in Peking are dragging into their sixth month with few signs of progress and doubts are growing in diplomatic circles here whether they can continue in their present form.

Informed sources close to both sides describe the talks as virtually deadlocked since they began Oct. 20. The main reason for their continuation seems to be a mutal desire by both feuding Communist giants to restrain passions and avoid a possible outbreak of large-scale hostilities.

How much longer the Kremlin's top trouble-shooting negotiator, Deputy Foreign Minister Vasily Kuznetsov, will remain in Peking is a question being asked frequently in East European and Western embassies.

Kuznetsov has now been in Peking at the head of an eight-man negotiating team since October, one month after the dramatic Peking Airport meeting between Premiers Chou En-lai and Alexei Kosygin. That brief summit led to the current attempt to scale down the tension between the two countries.

For some time, both Chinese and Soviet sources have conceded that little progress is being made at the talks, which involve only one or two formal sessions a week.

The Chinese are insisting that the two countries should agree on mutual troop withdrawals at trouble spots along the 4,000-mile common border before serious negotiations begin on demarcating the disputed boundary itself.

But the Russians have declared they need some evidence of Chinese good faith and willingness to settle the boundary and other disputes before withdrawing from potential flashpoints—particularly since many areas are much more heavily populated on the Chinese side than on the Soviet side.

But there remains a second major stumbling block: China insists the Kremlin admit the present borders were forced on weak Chinese emperors by Russian czars in the last century.

After such a Soviet admission, the Chinese say they would not insist on claiming huge slabs of territory involved but would be prepared to ratify the existing boundary more or less in its present form.

The Kremlin, however, adamantly refuses to make such an admission, since it suspects that the Chinese might use it for their own purposes at a later stage when they have become militarily stronger.

Some observers here believe the main purpose of the talks is to find how to achieve a degree of coexistence after the long ideological feud of the 1960s.

But both sides deny this.

Russia Counters The Longest Day

MOSCOW (Reuters) — The Soviet Union Thursday presented a vast new film epic of the Second World War which sets out to put the record straight about Russia's role in the victory.

An official at Mosfilm, the Moscow studio where it was made, said the movie, entitled Liberation, would serve as a Soviet answer to The Longest Day, the American production about the Western Allies invasion of Normandy in 1944.

Liberation is a five-part extravaganza in alternating color and black-and-white giving perhaps the most sympathetic screen portrayal of Josef Stalin since his denunciation by Nikita Kruschev 14 years ago.

The first two parts were shown to foreign correspondents and diplomats Thursday. The film was prepared to coincide with the 25th anniversary of the end of the war.

Brezhnev In Hungary

BUDAPEST (Reuters) — Soviet Communist leader Leonid Brezhnev arrived here from Moscow Thursday night to attend celebrations marking the 25th anniversary of Hungary's liberation in the Second World War, the Hungarian news agency MTI reported.

Only 20 minutes by car from downtown Victoria people who enjoy unspoilt country can be walking in this setting at Thetis Lake Park. The scene with canoe in the background is an arm of the upper lake.

Rifle Shot Removes Park's Rare Osprey

By HUMPHRY DAVY

The raven squawked loudly from a treetop in Thetis Lake park.

We felt trouble was brewing — something was amiss. Anyone who has studied this brash but clever bird gets to know his warning cries — incessant, noisy, raucous.

The raven is featured frequently on totem poles and for good reasons — his intelligence and magical powers.

Then suddenly an osprey, one of the most picturesque birds and one in danger of extinction, floated across the afternoon sky.

Surely the raven isn't afraid of a bird who subsists on fish.

Suddenly . . . a Shot

The answer wasn't long in coming. We heard a rifle shot. The majestic bird tumbled to the earth. The raven became silent.

Ten minutes later while walking on the trail on the north side of the upper lake we ran across three boys. One carried a rifle.

A sheer waste of life — yes. But it also seemed incredible that an osprey, a bird protected by law, should be shot in a wildlife sanctuary and park frequented by hundreds of people on weekends and holidays.

We mention this incident which occurred this week to draw attention to the need for a warden to protect the park against vandalism and the destruction of wildlife. The killing of birds and animals in Thetis has happened before.

This is a good time of the year to go to Thetis to see the importance of protecting this natural area and at the same time enjoy walking its trails.

Five Trails Made

There are five nature trails ranging between half and three-quarters of a mile which have been developed by the Thetis Park Nature Sanctuary Association.

The public owes a lot to this association. It has done more than any other organization of its kind to preserve the amenities and to protect the environment of the park.

It has also documented nearly all the plants, birds, animals and insects to be found in the area.

The trails take you through five types of terrain, each having its own particular ecological and plant associations. Many of the plants are labelled.

There is also a trail which takes you right around the two lakes, lower and upper Thetis.

Nest on High

On the west side of Upper Thetis, if you look up, you will see sitting high in a tree a huge nest.

Dr. Louis J. Clark, an official of the association, says the last time he saw an osprey in the nest was about seven years ago. What hapened to it, no one knows, but it's not hard to guess.

We walked on all the trails —a sort of grand tour — last Monday.

We met one Victorian who made some interesting observations on the park.

Thetis, he felt, should be enlarged without delay and its trail system expanded not only for the enjoyment of local residents but for visitors.

He thought visitors would stay an extra day or two in Victoria if walking tours were arranged or made available to them.

"A person could run a walking tour business during the summer months he said. "I'm not fooling. These so-called tourist experts don't seem to understand that many visitors come here to see the greenery and the sea. They want to feel the land — not only see scenery. When they ask me where they can hike, I send them back to their own country — the Olympic park across the way."

This might sound somewhat disloyal. But we agree that most visitors enjoy our greenbelts more than man-made tourist attractions similar to those they have left behind.

Salt Spring Good Place For Blood

The Red Cross is "extremely pleased" with the results of a blood-donor clinc at Ganges.

The 230 pints collected mean that 10 per cent of the Salt Spring town's residents contributed, said a Red Cross spokesman. The average clinic in Victoria gets donations from only slightly more than 1 per cent of the local population.

The clinic was sponsored by the Canadian Legion.

CRASH SAID CAUSE OF SEX OVERDRIVE

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A doctor for Gloria Sykes, who is suing the city for $500,000 with a claim that a cable car accident turned her into a nymphomaniac, says he believed injuries might have "caused disorder to her psyche."

Dr. Ralph Rosenberg testified Thursday that Miss Sykes, 29, visited him five times before he reached a conclusion that there was a question of "traumatic neurosis."

Another witness was Arthur Dunham, Miss Sykes' former employer. He testified that she worked as his secretary for three months in 1966, but that he fired her because there were periods when she would go into a daze.

Miss Sykes's lawyer, Marvin Lewis, contends his client's sex overdrive resulted from a 1964 cable car accident in which she received a head injury.

'12 Wars Since 1962 And Danger Growing'

A world-wide people's lobby to induce the big powers to reduce shipment of arms to the Middle East, was advocated Friday by Dr. Norman Alcock, a director and founder of the Canadian Peace Research Institute.

The 50-year-old scientist suggested this as the first step towards a goal to reduce the level of arms among nations.

"The effect of reducing and eliminating the shipment of arms to the Middle East would have a tremendous effect on some nations, especially African and Latin American countries which have gone dizzy over arms," he stated.

Speaking at a public meeting at the University of Victoria, he said since the Peace Research Institute was found in 1961, the danger of a world war had increased.

27 Nations Warred

"I think the world was a little safer in the early 1960s," he said. "There is more danger today, but at the same time we have more knowledge on the causes of war."

He listed what had occurred in the last 10 years which had increased the danger of a devasting nuclear war.

In the last eight years, 27 nations have been involved in 12 wars.

- In the last eight years, 27 nations have been involved in 12 wars.
- Since the atomic test ban there had been more tests than ever. Nations had got around the ban by conducting the nuclear tests underground.
- Few nations had supersonic aircraft 10 years ago. Today 32 nations were equipped with military jets.
- The arms race was spiraling at an alarming rate. The level of arms in 100 countries had increased by 11 per cent.

"Only six countries have decreased their arms and Canada is one of them," he said.

Dr. Alcock, who is not a pacifist in a doctrinaire sense, said he did not favor unilateral disarmament.

"If one nation disarms completely there is always danger of it being taken over by a fully-armed country," he said.

Dr. Alcock favored instead a gradual reduction in the level of arms—the big powers leading the way.

People could help the peace movement in three ways, he said. These were:

1. A people's lobby to stop the big powers from exporting "murder" (arms) to warring nations.
2. Public agitation for a change to the charter of the United Nations. The present charter was inadequate to cope with today's problems.
3. Re-education of children with regard to dogma and authority.

Computers Used

Alcock said series of questions submitted to computers showed that people brought up on authority and dogma leaned towards war.

"Somehow in our homes and in our schools children must be brought up with less authority and less dogma," He said. "It must be done if we are to live under a set of international laws."

He said for world government to succeed there needed to be a much greater feeling of community than there is at present.

He quoted the words of Bertrand Russell:

Simple Answer

"The root of the matter if we want a stable world is a very simple and old-fashioned thing, a thing so very simple that I am almost ashamed to mention it for fear of the derisive smile with which the wise cynics will greet my words.

"The thing I mean is love, Christian love or compassion. If you feel this, you have a motive for existence, a reason for courage, an imperative necessity for intellectual honesty."

Alcock felt that the United Nations Charter should be changed because UN voting patterns had become more and more polarized. This was a finding of research studies.

"This is not a good thing," he said. "The voting powers of nations should be changed."

Voting powers, he said, should be based on population, level of health, level of education and level of communication, and lowness of birth rate.

This was the formula computer studies came up with, he said.

NDP WALKS OUT OF HOUSE

Opposition Protests Parliamentary 'Farce'

The opposition finished off the business part of the 1970 legislative session Friday indignant at the "farce and mockery" the Social Credit government was allegedly making of parliament.

As the last business item—a motion by Provincial Secretary Wesley Black to provide for recording of the throne and budget debates—was concluded, the NDP walked out of the chamber.

The NDP and Liberals blasted the government for not including the discussions in committee in the portions that are to be recorded. Only the debates will be available in printed transcript to the public after the prorogation of the house.

'A MOCKERY'

"It is a farce and a mockery to allow the people of the province to think they are getting a complete debate," MDP leader Dave Barrett charged. "The real meat of the debates is being buried and kept hidden from the public."

Barrett suggested that the government was ashamed to let the people of the province know what was said in the house. He charged that the government had "gone mad with their overwhelming majority . . . believed the myth that they are plugged into God . . . and were not being responsible to the people."

It was sick and an insult to the people of B.C. to keep secrets from them, he added.

Liberal leader Dr. Pat McGeer said the resolution by Black was a shame on the premier, the cabinet ministers and on the backbenchers.

'TRANSCRIPT NEEDED'

Gordon Dowding (NDP—Burnaby-Edmonds) said a daily transcript of proceedings was necessary, and proposed an amendment that all debates and statements in the legislature be recorded. It was just a mockery to have the formal debates recorded, he added, because the really interesting discussions in the house were denied to the public.

Attorney - General Leslie Peterson said the amendment was out of order because it would involve the expenditure of public funds. The NDP challenged the ruling of deputy speaker Herb Bruch but were defeated 35 to 15, with the Liberals supporting the challenge.

After several other NDP MLAs had charged the government with violation of the rights of parliament and a dictatorial attitude, the official opposition party walked out of the legislature.

POLITICAL GAME

Outside, Barrett said he refused to sit in the chamber and be used as a "pawn in a political game played under the concept of the divine right to rule. We believe in the right of the public to be informed."

Following the walkout the Lieutenant-Governor John R. Nicholson arrived to give royal assent to the government legislation. The 1970 session ended at 5:30 p.m.

Government Spent $180,000 on Ads

Government advertising during the period July 1, 1969, to August 31, 1969, totalled nearly $180,000, excluding the department of industrial developmenet, trade and commerce.

Special cabinet warrants for $50,000 over-expenditure in advertising by the industry department were approved following the election. Skillings confirmed at the time that the department had placed ads on behalf of other government departments. The original advertising budget for the department had been $75,000.

The information was given by the various government departments in answer to questions from the opposition about the amount of government advertising around the time of the provincial election last August.

Only the industry department, headed by minister Waldo Skillings, did not answer the questions.

Of the $180,000, however, about one-quarter — $45,000 — was spent for out of province advertising to attract tourists from western Canada and the United States by the travel industry department.

The largest expenditures were by the travel industry department, $49,000; labor, $45,500; highways, $35,000; provincial secretary, $11,100 — of which $10,100 was for civil service positions; education, $13,200; and municipal affairs $10,750 — of which $9,300 was spente on a pamphlet "A Home of Your Own."

City Manager Confident No-Frills Budget to Pass

By JIM HUME

City manager Dennis Young said today he is confident objections to last June's capital budget program have been eliminated.

In modified form the five-year "plan for progress," trimmed by more than $2 million since June 28, 1969, goes to the people again on April 30.

Last June the city asked 17,939 registered property owners to endorse the $8,588,000 five-year borrowing plan.

Only 3,934 voted, 21.95 per cent of the eligible list. And of those 52 spoiled their ballots, leaving a legitimate vote total of 3,882 of which 2,318 voted "no" and 1,564 "yes."

The total vote was less than 1 per cent lower than when the first five-year capital budget vote was called in 1964. But the mood of the voters had changed.

In 1964 with 18,612 eligible voters on the list, 4,174 (22.4 per cent) cast votes. Of that total 78.7 per cent voted in favor of an orderly plan for borrowing.

Confident in that first showing, and sure that the visible signs of progress in the city were more than enough proof of the success of that first five-year plan, city officials approached June 28, 1969, without qualms.

Their confidence was unjustified, the people's "no" loud and clear.

It took a few weeks to shake off the shock of rejection.

Then the post-mortem began.

"Obviously something had gone drastically wrong," Young says. "We didn't know what. Everybody we talked to had a different theory, most of them contradictory.

"Two things were certain: we had to go to the people again because a five-year plan really is essential; and we had to find out before then just what went wrong."

By September, Young had his answers.

Some were predictable, some surprising. All came from people who voted.

Of the voters questioned during the survey period, 43 per cent had voted in favor of the five-year plan and 57 per cent against, close enough to the actual results (40.28 per cent for, 59.72 per cent against) to give authenticity to the survey.

"We wanted to know why the people had been so strongly opposed to the June plan," Young says. "And we wanted to know what they were looking for in the way of progress."

Surprisingly enough the parks and recreation vote drew the strongest objections, the roads and sewer programs most praise.

One of the main items in the June budget was a $162,000 community centre for Beacon Hill Park designed to provide recreational facilities for the elderly and change rooms and meeting rooms for cricketers and bowlers.

Young admits the project was icing on the cake.

"We felt that to be successful a five-year capital budget must contain some funds for improving recreational facilities, for providing more outlets for leisure use," Young said.

"We were badly mistaken.

"The survey told us that, beyond doubt, most people felt that Beacon Hill Park improvements were not an essential expenditure at this time.

"A typical reaction was 'Why should the taxpayers pay to build sports facilities just for bowlers and cricketers?' Others felt that Beacon Hill Park was used primarily for tourists and had enough money spent on it anyway.

"It shook us a little, just as the survey's revelation that most of the people voting against the budget regarded our Pioneer Square beautification plans as a low-priority item."

But if parks and beautification had a rough ride, roads and sewers received almost total blessings from the people surveyed.

"We were told in no uncertain terms that the people wanted better roads, that's why on April 30 more than half of the five-year budget is earmarked for that purpose," Young says.

All issues were not as clear cut in the minds of voters as parks and roads.

"There was considerable confusion in the minds of many voters on just what the issues were," Young said. "unfortunately around the time of the vote the proposed convention centre controversy was rife.

"It never was a part of the capital budget, but at least 10 per cent of the people surveyed felt that it was—and they were unanimously opposed to it.

"Another cause for resentment came from 13 per cent of those surveyed who told us that on voting day they were still angry over increased assessments. They had been told that the mill rate would be held and therefore had felt that assessments and taxes would not increase.

"It had nothing to do with the June 28 vote, but it was obviously disastrous."

Young was asked if last June's vote had shown any positive "yes-or-no" patterns in specific areas of the city.

"Strangely enough the breakdown revealed no significant pattern," he answered. "The opposing voters were side by side all through the city.

"There was a similar pattern in the vote breakdown by income. In the high income bracket 42.8 per cent voted for the budget, 57.2 per cent against.

"In the middle income bracket the vote went the other way by about the same percentage, 53.6 per cent for, 46.4 per cent against.

"The only significant gap showed in the low income group where 31.1 per cent voted in favor and 68.9 per cent against.

"These figures, of course, apply only to the voters contacted by our survey team, not the total vote."

To test general knowledge on budget issues the city survey staff designed a quick quiz.

People who could recall from memory five or more items from the five-year plan were given a "complete comprehension" rating. Recalling three to five items gained a "good" rating; one to two, "medium comprehension" and little or no idea a "low comprehension" score.

Having established the comprehension rate the survey revealed that 44 per cent of those contacted were in the top category, 31 per cent "good," 19 per cent "medium" and 6 per cent "low."

"And that led to an intriguing discovery," Young said. "Of those with high comprehension of what it was all about, 40.4 per cent voted in favor and 59.6 per cent against.

"In the second bracket 55.6 per cent of those with a good knowledge approved the budget, 44.4 voted against. In the medium knowledge group 35 per cent were in favor, 65 per cent against.

And in the low-knowledge group, people who admitted they just didn't understand what it was all about, the negative vote was 100 per cent."

Major Work on Finlayson Street Proposed

Saanich Planner Slams Province

By ROGER STONEBANKS

The provincial government has "consistently avoided any role of leadership" in facing up to urban problems, says Saanich planner Tom Loney.

The legislature appears to be dominated by rural values, he says, and the problems of growing cities receive scant attention.

And the record of co-operation with local government in development works by government and crown corporations "can only be characterized as poor."

Loney's opinions are contained in the 1968-69 municipal planning department report.

"In making this observation," he says, "we do not single out British Columbia for a special award but apply it to virtually all provincial governments."

MAJOR BURDEN

The lack of firm development control in unorganized (non-municipal) territory under provincial jurisdiction "is something we will all have to pay for and will pose a major burden on the regional district concerned that will be partly borne by the municipalities."

Loney said B.C. Hydro's plan to put a major transmission line the height of a seven-storey building through Saanich and Victoria is "nothing short of monstrous."

To keep initial costs to the minimum, the overhead line "will tear its way though urban areas with no consideration given to what it does to living amenities, the fabric of the community or future property values.

"Areas along the route will, in future, develop to the densities now existing, for example, along Cook Street south of Fort Street. Picture a 132,000-volt transmission line on 70-foot towers in this area and consider that other major routes in the metropolitan area are planned for the future."

RESTRICTED

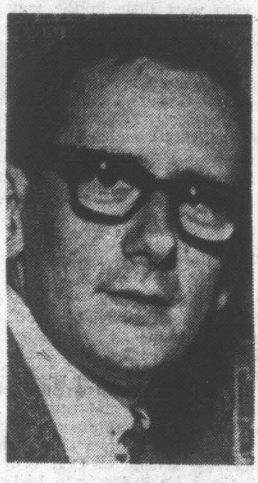
Loney said the powers and resources of local and regional government depend heavily on senior governments. Financial resources open to local government are very restricted. No serious attempt has been made to permit the local government wider financial powers and no significant increases in aid from senior governments have been forthcoming.

"Even if we could tighten up our development pattern to minimize municipal development costs (a process which is hampered by restricted legislative powers) there would still be insufficient finances available to local government to meet its commitments and problems," he said.

The enabling legislation for planning matters, mainly contained in the Municipal Act, was described by Loney as permissive and broad.

This meant a municipality could do virtually as much or as little as it wished. Government and civil service had adopted a philosophy of the less direction the better.

"Consequently, each municipality tends to go its own way with little guidance as to comprehensiveness and integration. Planning is also considered to be an optional extra rather than a basic aspect of sound municipal government," he said.



LONEY
. . . 'monstrous'

Zoning was quite limited in scope and subdivision legislation contained few meaningful standards.

Loney said senior government should lead, and not say in effect "here is what you may do if you feel like it."

Looking to the future, Loney said the world is changing rapidly yet man is extremely stubborn about changing his ways and outlook.

"The growing spectres of uncontrolled population growth, shortage of resources, environmental deterioration and ecological breakdown leading to irreparable damage to our water and our air, suggest that we must either develop an entirely new perception of living by the end of the century or we must face the strong possibility of extinction," he said.

Possibly the heritage of "frontier individualism" is too strong, man is perhaps too selfish to seriously think of society as a whole.

"We urgently need a sense of co-operation and a new sense of purpose — a true comprehensiveness in looking at our problems and our choices. We also need a sense of urgency, a commitment to act before it is too late.

"It may well be that the Sixties will be seen as the period in which man succeeded in defining the problems and possibilities he has created through his own actions and through his increased self-awareness, began to learn how to avoid the disasters which now seem inevitable," he said.

GENERATE DEBATE

Loney said some of the views expressed may not reflect opinions and policies of council, but to a certain extent his purpose is to generate debate.

In Saanich, he said growing demands are being made upon the municipality which, like others, faces "the gigantic problem" of how to pay for services and facilities.

Research had shown that single-family housing pays its way in terms of revenue received to cover costs of services provided "only under the most favorable circumstances."

Apartments, industry and commercial enterprises customarily provided the bulk of revenue. Yet Saanich has few apartments, industry is negligible (and prospects remote) and the major commercial areas serving Saanich (downtown and two regional shopping centres) are in Victoria city.

REGIONAL BASIS

The most conventional approach to this is that Saanich must attract more industry, but he said this appears to offer little hope and to be of dubious desirability.

More promising was a closer move to regional government, with services and facilities being provided and paid for on a regional basis.

"This is under way in some instances but it is unlikely to offer a complete answer within the near future and it may prove desirable to maintain a level of local servicing and financing," he said.

"A much more immediate and important lesson to be learned and borne in mind constantly is that Saanich must be particularly careful in its development and servicing actions."

Council Solid on Budget 'At Least Until Tomorrow'

Victoria city council will present a solid front to the people on the five-year $6.3 million capital budget referendum.

"At least until tomorrow," says Ald. Hugh Ramsay.

Ramsay made the statement Friday after a meeting called to iron out the techniques of distributing information on the budget blew up into a losing final-hour bid to trim capital expenditure programs by close to $1 million.

Ald. Tom Christie dropped the bombshell minutes after Mayor Courtney Haddock had assured the press it could go home "because all we'll be discussing today is the mechanics of how to get the word to the people."

Christie, defeated Thursday in an attempt to cut $743,000 from the five-year road-building program, said he had been assured by traffic engineer Dave Campbell, city manager Dennis Young and treasurer James Bramley, that all three would be happy to see the cuts made.

"I think," said Young, "that Ald. Christie has taken a little licence with the remarks of the traffic engineer. What Mr. Campbell said was 'if there must be cuts in the road budget, then they should be in this particular area.'

"But that does not mean he is in favor of the cuts.

"On the contrary he feels the budget should remain as it is."

Christie wanted council to eliminate from the five-year plan proposals to widen and improve Vancouver from Pembroke to Pandora ($370,000); Heywood Avenue widening from Rupert to Southgate ($30,000) and work on Finlayson from Blanshard to Cook (343,000).

On the vote only Christie voted in favor of the cuts.

More protests were to come before council got down to the "mechanics" of information dissemination.

FAILED AGAIN

Ald. Harold Olafson, defeated Thursday in his effort to get a fire-fighting training centre trimmed from the program, said he'd like to make one more attempt to reverse council's decision.

He failed again but only by virtue of the rules which state that on a tied vote a motion is lost.

Backed by Aldermen Peter Pollen, Cecil Parrot and Christie, Olafson said he was all for a training centre "but not now and not to the cost of city taxpayers."

Voting against his bid to trim the training centre from the budget were Mayor Haddock and Aldermen Hugh Ramsay, Percy Frampton and Ove Witt.

'DISGUSTS ME'

Ramsay, who had little to say on Christie's attempt to cut road building expenditures, said he was trying hard "to compose myself on this . . . much of the procedure here this afternoon disgusts me. Why in hell weren't these things laid on the line yesterday?

"These aldermen (Pollen and Olafson) keep saying they've been told overnight that this training centre will defeat the capital budget.

"If they have been told that I'm sure they have been told by people who know virtually nothing about its need.

"This proposal has gone through the policy review committee. It was approved yesterday after I thought we did a good job. I think it's time we showed some guts and got on with the job."

Ramsay said it was essential that the city had somewhere to train rookie firefighters "other than at an actual fire."

'PRETTY DEFLATED'

Ald. Ove Witt said he couldn't understand the attempts by Pollen, Olafson and Christie to make changes in the budget after Thursday's debate and decision.

"I left here yesterday afternoon full of optimism and ready to get the message out," he said. "I came back here today, still optimistic—but I'm pretty deflated right now.

"I'm in favor of getting on with the job. I thought we all were. Let's get on with it."

Haddock, who later cast the deciding vote on the fire-training centre, said the second go-round of argument was good.

"You have to tear a product apart before you can back it," he said.

"We did that yesterday," retorted Witt.

With both cut attempts defeated the capital budget program remains at $6,613,000, an increase from the original $5,570,000 but sharply cut from June's $8.5 million.

Voting day will be April 30.

If approved the budget gives the city the authority to borrow money for specific projects without going to the people on each individual effort.

Too Many No-No's By Natives

It was the "natives" who were restless when Victoria sought approval of its five-year capital budget last June.

A city survey team conducting a post-mortem survey following defeat of the plan reported that "the people with the largest number of objections were invariably natives of the city. In many cases they resented 'newcomers'.

On the other hand people who had come here to retire liked the city and thought the municipal tax burden was lighter than other Canadian cities.

YES-NO'S SHOW CONFUSED VOTERS

When the City of Victoria asked property owners to approve an $8.5 million capital budget last June they got a solid "no" answer.

A few weeks later a city survey team asked "did you feel that spending $8.5 million over five years was too much?" and heard "definitely, yes, much-to-much money," in reply.

A little later in the interview they asked whether voters would have felt more kindly to a $1.7 million a year expenditure over five years.

And to that they got the positive "yes, that would be all right."

All of which leaves city manager Dennis Young and treasurer James Bramley a little bewildered. It adds up to the same amount.

They point out that's what a capital budget is all about.

"You don't borrow the money and spend it tomorrow," Young says. "You merely get the permission of property owners to borrow the money, year by year, to carry out an orderly and easy to finance series of capital projects."

LET US COMMENCE WITH the case of Cordova Bay Elementary School playground, on which the bulldozers have been busy these last few days. At the back of the school, an eye-pleasing expanse of grass is to be replaced with an earth-concrete mix.

"What's the point of it?" asks a vexed and puzzled householder who feels that the green carpet should have been left in place.

"When they were building that school," this long-time resident remembers, "they kept trucks busy carting the topsoil away.

"Later, they fetched in another batch of topsoil, and planted the playground in grass. That was about two years ago.

"Now, when the grass is nicely established, darn if they aren't ploughing it all up so they can lay down a hard surface. And when I ask the school district the reason for the change, all I get is a run-around."

Not so, says a school district spokesman. The grass in question may have looked pretty at a distance. But it was a mistake.

"It was too close up to the school," he explained, "and when you put grass where 400 students are going to spill out onto it at recess and noon-hour, the result is going to be mud. So we"re hard-surfacing part of that area, but the neighbors who appreciate grass needn't worry. We'll have plenty of it on a piece of land we've added to the school grounds. With that addition, we'll have a nice grassy field for soccer and other sports."

Sounds a little like robbing Peter to pay Paul, but that's the grass-roots account, and there we leave it.

If you agree that prevention is better than cure, it may interest you to know that Victoria is to have a health-education centre open to all who wish to use its services.

The centre, which has been in the works for a number of months, is located opposite Hillside Shopping Centre at 3019 Shakespeare Street. Opening is set for 1:30 p.m. Wednesday, April 8.

Purpose of the centre, says Rest Haven Hospital Administrator Tom Bradley, is to utilize the professional knowledge of capital region medical men in a preventive program designed to ward off illness before it starts.

The program, Bradley tells me, has been pre-checked by Victoria Medical Association executive. It will consist of lectures, films, and individual counselling by doctors taking part. The service, offered afternoons and evenings, is free in all particulars save one.

Smokers who enrol in a five-day course designed to wean them from the weed will be required to pay $10.

"The psychology there," says Brandley, "is one of incentive. The person on the course may be less prone to wavering if he realizes that he wastes his fee by doing so."

Although the centre is under Seventh Day Adventist sponsorship, Tom Bradley emphasizes that it is to be undenominational in scope and character.'

What's offered is not a clinic for the treatment of ailments. The idea, which strikes me as a sound one, is to provide the education that will help keep health problems from developing.

A COUPLE OF YEARS ago, I told you about Mair and Ed, outdoors-minded friends who trailered west from Ottawa on a year-long honeymoon. They settled in West Vancouver, and we thought of them as rooted there until a letter arrived this week.

Mair has quit her job. Ed leaves his at the end of the month. Then they hook up their trailer and shove off, so help me, for at least three years of roying and fishing.

Summers, they'll wander British Columbia. They'll winter south. And wherever their mood takes them, they will be tapping fish-infested lakes and streams.

I'm not envious! After all, what would life be without lawns to mow, leaves to rake, and other such disciplines that are the anchored householder's lot?

But just in case we also find ourselves gypsying around the countryside some year, we've asked them to send along a breakdown of their monthly costs.

When we get it, I'll pass it along.

Italy's Palaces Influence Fashion's Top Buyers

By BRENDA W. ROTZOLL

ROME (UPI) — The number of Italian fashion firms working in private family palaces has doubled since January.

Now there are two — and one is of American heritage.

The first was the Marchese Emilio Pucci, whose family and palace in Florence date to the 11th century.

The second is La Mendola — the American duo of Mike La Mendola of Rockford, Ill., and Jack Savage of Herminie, Pa.

Their mansion is in Rome's fashion centre, Via Gregoriana, one block from the Spanish Steps known to millions of tourists.

Many Italian designers think where they show their clothes is almost as important as the clothes themselves.

They want to impress their clients. And when the world press and buyers come in twice a year, they think an elegant setting helps draw the top people.

The La Mendola mansion has been in the family only since January, but it has been a part of Roman history almost as long as there has been a Rome.

The house is built into a steep hillside. Roman history starts 200 steps down past the furnace room at a grill sealed by the government pending archeological excavation of a passage running up the Pincain Hill toward the Via Veneto.

The Dolce Vita set of pre-Christian times frequented the neighborhood. The villa of the Roman consul Lucullus in the first century B.C. stood about where the American Embassy stands now on the Veneto.

It was the scene of banquets so famous that even now the world Lucullan is used to describe superb meals.

The La Mendola mansion is built where part of Lucullus' gardens once stood.

Marian Kemp, daughter of a former U.S. ambassador here and a member of the Morgan banking family, purchased it in 1904.

For decades she entertained nobility, diplomats and art world figures like Henry James. He put the house — and some say Miss Kemp — into the novel "Daisy Miller."

Miss Kemp loved elegance. Her balconied bedroom was papered entirely in gold brocade and had a huge gilt wardrobe chest.

Three years ago when she died, the house passed to the nuns at Salvator Mundi, Rome's American-run international hospital. They sold it to La Mendola.

"It's perfect. We're not doing a thing to it architecturally," Savage said.

He and La Mendola will live and hold shows there and use a connected annex to house workrooms for 20 people.

The house is L-shaped, with the long leg lying along Via Gregoriana. Room-width halls run the length of that side so that no traffic disturbs living quarters.

The marble halls, with 16th century wood paneling from a church, lead past a brocade-walled salon to the two storey ballroom.

The artist and sculptor Canova used the room as a studio in the late 17th century. A headless marble female figure in the dining room is attributed to him.

La Mendola plans to leave the ballroom just as it is, with walls hung in red damask and a marble fireplace flanked by two-storey gilt pillars from a 16th century church.

Here they will have their fashion shows in the most elegant showroom this side of the Pucci and Pitti Palaces in Florence.

A mirrored sunroom opens from the ballroom and looks onto a small formal garden with fishpond and dolphin fountain.

From the upper story La Mendola can lean out his bedroom window, pluck fresh lemons for dinner and look over the temple through a gap in the rooftops to the flag flying atop the presidential Quirinale Palace.

The famed Spanish Steps of Rome lead from Piazza Espana to the church on the hill known as Trinite del Monte. Italy's fashion firms are playing on the attraction of the steps and the private palaces of Italian families in the vicinity to draw buyers to their shows. (Canadian Pacific Photo)

DEAR ABBY . . .

Trust Priest

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago I started dating a boy whom I met in my last year of high school. We announced our engagement this past October. We planned a May wedding. At the end of January we could wait no longer so we slipped away and were married by a justice of the peace in the next state. We had no problem for we are both of age. Things have gone quite well for us until now.

Now the heartbreak is setting in. As I said before, we planned to marry in May. All plans have been made—church, gowns, and even the invitations have been sent. Yesterday, while talking to a friend, I learned that if the priest finds out that we have already been married by a JP he can refuse to marry us in the church. For we have been "living in sin," according to church laws.

Now I am confused. When the priest questions us should we lie to him about our present situation? Can he turn us down for what we've done? I always thought that God forgives all. We would like to rectify the wrong we've done, if it was really wrong. We are really planning on being married in church and it would kill our parents if they knew the truth for they are planning on it as much as we.

Please answer as soon as possible, for our meeting with the priest is in three weeks.—Very Much Confused.

DEAR CONFUSED: As a member of the Catholic church you are subject to its laws. By your secret marriage you have broken faith with this code. This fact poses a serious, but not insurmountable, problem for your parish priest.

The Catholic church teaches that the sacraments (of which marriage is one) "are for the benefit of the people of God." Hence I am sure that the priest in your parish will receive you well when you see him. Do so at once. When he questions you, tell him the whole truth. Remember that his life is dedicated to helping his people. You need his help. Call on him, trust him, and follow his counsel.

DEAR ABBY: Is it true that you had a Jewish father?—Nosy.

DEAR NOSY: Yup. And a Jewish mother, too!

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were married for nearly 10 years. We had a family. We were then divorced, but remained friends just the same. After four years of being divorced, we decided to give it another chance, so we are going to get married again.

My question: We want all our friends to know of our decision. Would it be in good taste to send our "announcements" saying something like, "Jack and Mary are back together again" or maybe, "Announcing the reuniting of the Smith family"? We honstly don't know what is proper. Can you help us? If anyone reading your column has ever been through this we would welcome their suggestions.—Nameless in Illinois.

DEAR NAMELESS: Either of your above ideas is fine. If any of my readers have "been there" and have a suggestion, I'll pass it on.

DEAR ABBY: When I see women with legs like an elephant—or women with pouter pigeon bodies perched on stork-like legs wearing mini-skirts, I am ashamed of my own sex!—Lucy from the Ozarks.

DEAR LUCY: Didn't the Arkansas Traveller say, "There's no substitute for common sense"?

What's your problem? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. Write to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif., 90069. For a personal reply enclose stamped, addressed envelope.

Hate to write letters? Send $1 to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif., 90069, for Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions."

CBC, Maggie Part Company

TORONTO (CP) — Maggie Morris, for several months the CBC's only woman announcer on its English-language television network, said Thursday she has been dismissed because of complaints she has a "phoney English accent."

Miss Morris, born in England but raised in Canada, said in an interview that as far as she knew the complaints about her voice came more from inside the CBC rather than from listeners.

She said the first indication she was given about the problem was when chief announcer John Rae told her of the complaints and announced she was dismissed.

Mr. Rae said later in an interview that Miss Morris had developed a "strange sort of style."

After she had been hired, Mr. Rae said, mail from listeners was "5 to 1 for her," but recently the mail "turned right around" and listeners complained about her accent.

The CBC has five women on its French-language network but, except for the Second World War years, has hired women only as temporary announcers for English-language programs.

For Gwen Cash: Poetry in a Concrete Honey-Comb

By JUDI FREEMAN

Gwen Cash looks out at Victoria from her balcony, 10 stories up.

Gwen Cash settled back on the comfy sofa, paused a moment to collect her thoughts, and then let fly.

"There are too many people who don't SEE life when they are my age."

And . . .

"So many older people don't bother to make new friends and they should."

Or even more bluntly . . .

"Friends have a tendency to die off."

This is the Mrs. Cash who built Victoria's Trend Home in 1954; the Mrs. Cash who left her Victoria hotel publicity job because the company became upset about a book she wrote; and the Mrs. Cash who told 1918 Vancouver newspaper readers what it was like to be a picker in the Island's strawberry fields.

"As much as I think I'd like to be young again today, I realize what fun I did have back then."

She pulled from a bookshelf her published memories: I Like B.C. (1939) and A Million Miles from Ottawa (mid-forties).

But her story today isn't particularly about her memories of yesterday.

Mrs. Cash, a great-grandmother three times over, riffled through a sheaf of papers on the sofa beside her.

Selecting one to read, she commented that she's dropped into a new field of writing which gives her ample opportunity to "sharpen her wits" as an "observant critic" of today's world.

"Grandmothers are supposed to love grandchildren and they do within reason but on park benches or over a cocktail admit they are thankful
when the little dears depart and their rooms are quiet again."

With a pithy comment about "houses too small for hearths or grandmothers" she concludes,

"With money safely invested clad in psychedelic colours and hung about with crystal beads they fly to far off countries.

Or are pushed into places called homes that really aren't."

Sacred Cows is among Mrs. Cash's as-yet-unpublished collection of 27 poems, called Crested on the Tide. It is one of the many looks she has taken at Victoria and Victorians.

Years ago, she admits, she sold poems to publications such as Christian Science Monitor and Vanity Fair but it was "sheer verse," not the free form now popular.

"For some unknown reason, I started writing this style last spring," she said.

Mrs. Cash works at a desk facing out toward the Olympic Mountains.

From my window
ten stories up
a little walled-in garden and bright flowers.

From my window
ten stories up
snow peaks on the skyline swift moving clouds.

Below my window
ten stories down
people hustle bustle run like ants.

Mrs. Cash moved from her Trend Home recently after 15 years in the much-publicized "John di Castri special." It and its surrounding woodlands became too much to handle in addition to the pace of the freelance writer so Mrs. Cash opted for a high-rise apartment.

The square white walls and "mile-high" view are part of her transition to poetic imagery.

What is it I most greatly miss in this concrete honey-comb
I now call home?
The feel of earth beneath my feet in which to plant chives parsley mint for summer salads?

The answer isn't easy for Mrs. Cash. Nor is it easy for those she sees around her.

In this small city which is in effect a world conference on longlivity honeycombs in concrete ferment with the loneliness of solitary feminality.

These are her thoughtful poems, born of long days and longer nights, when the urge to communicate can no longer be stifled. A life spent writing, living writable experiences is not easily put aside.

"This feeling of stepping into a new art form," Mrs. Cash says, contemplating her books and her poems beside them, "is somewhat like the release I got coming out to Vancouver.

The impact of the north shore and the mountains was great on the young English lady leaving the war-weary England of 1918 for a raw country.

"It was a lovely feeling," she exclaims.

That lovely feeling was a zest for life which carried her into the Okanagan as a cub reporter for a Vancouver paper; and into marriage to a Canadian soldier.

She was precipitated into fruit farming, logging, forestry and turkey farming, all the while writing freelance articles and doing publicity for various groups.

Ten years at the Empress as its publicity officer gave Mrs. Cash food for thought and some thought for her second book, A Million Miles from Ottawa.

By the mid-fifties, she decided to support herself solely on her freelance stories.

Her recent work includes a third book, Don't Kiss the Cat, her story of an English girl in a new land.

She admits the rejection slips from publishers are still growing but she feels the book contributes to the Canadian scene.

"And frankly I think it would be a pity to lose it."

Meanwhile, as the freelancing continues, Mrs. Cash can look out her window at the "aging cliff dwellers from highrise apartments" and wonder about "the happy winds of chance" which bring "new friendships to my door."

Women Go Canadian In Fashion Wear

SASKATOON (CP) — Canadian women are wearing clothes by Canadian designers — and that's a relatively new phenomenon.

Marielle Fleury, a Montreal designer who was in Saskatoon to show a collection of all-weather coats, said that a few years ago all Canadian manufacturers used to buy New York styles.

But now many of them have their own designers and they are bringing a new viewpoint to the fashion scene, she said.

Marielle, who attended Montreal's School of Fine Arts, originally intended to go into advertising.

However, she was interested in fashion, so she took two years' training at a Montreal fashion school and later went to work as a designer for a fashion house.

About eight years ago she opened her own fashion boutique and began using hand-woven fabrics. These were so successful she took her collection to Europe one year, showing it in London, Paris and Milan.

More recently she has been designer for Rainmaster, and at the National Collection show in Toronto in January was one of the award winners.

For this spring she predicts the Wet Look as most important in rainwear. It results from plasticizing a cotton fabric.

The shiny velvets, in pale shades, will also be at the top, Mrs. Fleury said.

Fluffy Fashions For After Five

Definitely not for the stout nor the asthmatic, is this evening suit from Maggy Reeves in picture at right.

The floral chiffon midicoat is trimmed with ostrich feathers at the neck and cuffs. The dropped waistline is marked by a matching sash and the skirt is slightly full.

A mini-length slip dress completes the ensemble.

Margaret Gower, assembly chaplain, officially opened the event. She was introduced by Roberta Stevenson, district deputy president. Cora Cleaver, vice-grand, was convener.

Max's Patterns Promote Minis

At left is Complex Max worn with a pale blue denim skirt and abbreviated top. The design at the right, Light Years Away, features stars to complement the red, white and blue cotton printed dress.

The designs are certainly eye-catching but the question is how many legs can stand up to such scrutiny.

KNIT AND CHAT

By MAY MAC LEAN

Knitting Began in Near East

I often receive letters asking about the history of knitting and during my travels, I try to find out interesting bits of information as well as search for old books on the subject. I thought I would devote a few columns to some of the history I have gathered.

Knitting is, as you have no doubt heard, one of the oldest crafts with its origins extending back almost to the origins of human culture. There is something in every one of us which seeks to create a thing of beauty, given the opportunity and the materials to do so.

Throughout the ages, people have pursued their own ideas of beauty, whether it be buildings, weaving, painting or other forms of decorating. They have carried out this pursuit with whatever materials came to hand — wood, stone, feathers, bone, ivory, cloth, jewels, metals, glass, clay, shell, leather and, of course, wool.

Knitting is very much a part of the age-old pursuit to create something beautiful and is a true folk art, in that it has been developed over the centuries by ordinary people. Many patterns that we know today were first formed by hands that have become dust many hundreds of years ago!

The origin of knitting is lost in antiquity, but it is known to have come from the near East, probably Arabia. Scraps of knitted fabric have been found in Egyptian tombs.

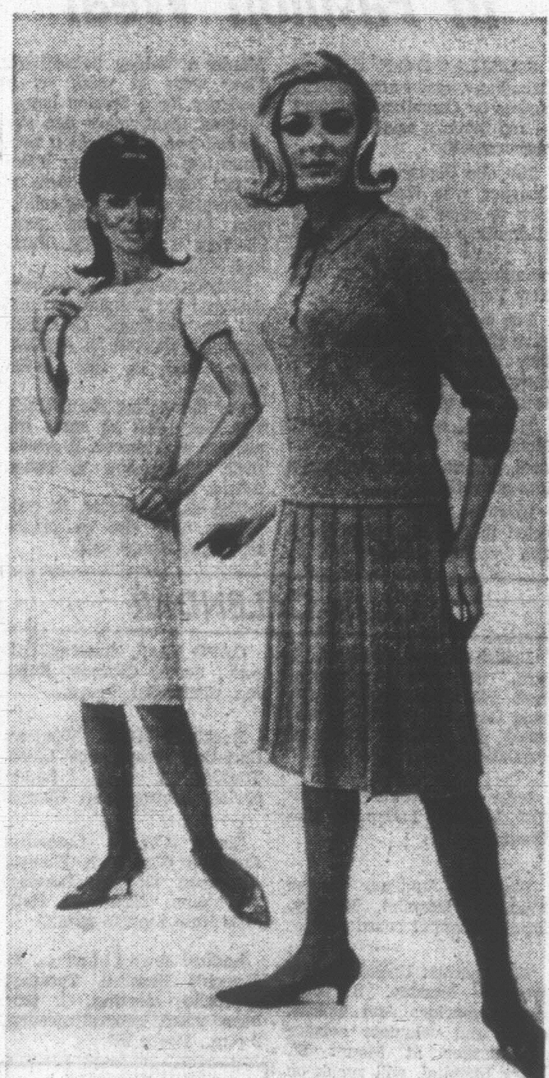
Possibly Cleopatra herself wore knitted garments. The art of knitting was certainly well established by Cleopatra's day, and, at a fairly early date, was carried from its eastern home into Europe.

This week's pattern features the newest in skirt styles — just very slightly flared, and ribbed to give a simulated pleat effect. You can make it any length you wish to suit your own individual style.

There are instructions given for two raglan sleeve tops, which would be great to wear with slacks also. One is the teeshirt style buttoned at the neck with neat turned down collar; the other is a square neck with no fastening.

This is a versatile outfit which could be worn the year round. Sizes given are for 32-34-36-38 inch bust, and it is made from a boucle type of wool, or you could substitute a sayelle yarn.

To order Leaflet No. 6704, send 35 cents in coin or money order, (no stamps or personal cheques please). Your order must be accompanied with a stamped, self-addressed return envelope, long one if possible. Send to May E. Mac Lean, KNIT and CHAT, care of The Times. Please be sure to state pattern number when ordering and to allow two to three weeks for delivery.



This week's pattern is a go-together skirt and top outfit. The simulated pleats of the skirt give it a slightly flared look. The tops are raglan sleeve and may be worn with slacks. One is styled like a teeshirt, buttoned at the neck with a turned down collar. The other is squared at the neck with no fastening. Sleeves are variable.

Capt. 'Brick' Ends 50 Salt-Sprayed Years

By PAT DUFOUR

After 50 years at sea, packed with incidents worthy of a Hornblower series, one of Victoria's master mariners and pilots has decided to "swallow the sea anchor."

Capt. "Brick" Davenport, 65, of 109 Wildwood, retired this month after 16 years with the B.C. Pilotage.

Christened Wilfred, it's many years since he was called it. He earned the nickname Brick through the shade the wind tanned his skin when, at 15 he became a merchant marine cadet.

His "sea time" started long before than — when, at the age of six, he came from England with his parents.

The bug bit then. He waited only long wnough to acquire an education, join the Boys Naval Brigade, and ship out on the Melville Dollar, bound for the Orient.

He and a fellow cadet, Leonard Marchant, who was also aboard, became the first local boys the Navy League of Canada placed aboard the ship for training.

Davenport served with the Dollar line for four years until the Canadian branch was sold out, then worked with several coastal companies, the Victoria Tug Co., the Imperial Oil, the CPR and did a stint on whaling ships.

When it came time to earn his master's ticket he headed for the Far East again.

His ship, the Hop Sang, hit disaster on his first trip. She broke up off the southern tip of Formosa during a typhoon. The crew survived.

This was in 1936 but already the Japanese were apprehensive. They arrested the Hop Sang's crew, choosing to believe that the men were there to study the Japanese fortifications on Formosa. They reluctantly released them later to a Chinese ship which came to rescue them.

Davenport spent three years with the Jardine, Matheson Co. and was in the Foo Sing, the first Chinese ship to be stopped by the Japanese. He was in Shanghai when the first Japanese gunfire rattled over the city.

Then, after a year on the Australian coast, Davenport was ready for his master's ticket.

He came back to Canada, joined the Royal Canadian Navy as a lieutenant and went to war.

The war years saw him in command of five ships. The one he remembers most is the frigate HMCS Dunver.

SEA SHEPHERD

It was at her wheel, that he was put in charge of the largest trans-Atlantic convoy of the war — 157 ships — which he shepherded to Ireland in 12 days without the loss of a single vessel.

His next convoy suffered the loss of one ship. Retribution was made when Dunver and HMCS Hespeler sank the raiding submarine.

Colorful as these and other adventures were, the captain says they pale when compared to piloting foreign vessels along the B.C. coast, which he describes as the most treacherous in the world.

With 28 ports to cover, Davenport says the 74 pilots are still not enough.

"It's a colossal job and with the traffic increasing in inside waters the load gets heavier — and more demanding — all the time."

SHARES FEAR

He voices the fear of other pilots who are concerned with the growing number of Russian ships plying our waters.

"They carry no pilots aboard and never use their radios so it's hard to pin down exactly where they are.

"One of these days, one of them will come roaring around the corner — out of the blue — there's the danger."

He also sees danger in too much use of radar and computers.

"Ships' officers rely too much on radar these days. Few of them have been trained the way we were, that is, by the old whistle system. If anything goes wrong with the radar, what then?"

He tells of ships that run by bridge-based computers with their engine rooms locked all night and, sometimes, all weekend.

"That's asking for trouble."

The pressure for speed, enforced by economic requirements, also adds hazards.

CITIES EXAMPLE

"Take, as an example, the American car ferry Wickersham which steams at 24 knots. When you've made Vancouver from Prince Rupert in 26 hours, standing six-hour watches on the bridge, turn and turn about, you're pretty well exhausted."

What was one of his worst moments?

Davenport cites a time last December when he was due to take a ship out of Kitimat.

"It was 17 below and blowing 50 knots. She was a big brute. It took me a week to get warm."

The captain says he's through with the sea. From now on it's golf, leisure and shore-gazing.

But already he and his wife Kathleen are planning a round-the-world trip. This one, though, will be as passengers on freighters.

TIED UP in home port at last, Capt. "Brick" Davenport contents himself with looking at the sea from his front lawn.

Important Old Shrine Discovered

SAKKARA (Reuters) — An ancient shrine visited by Queen Cleopatra has been unearthed near the pyramids in one of the most important archeological finds of this century in Egypt.

Prof. Walter Emery and a combined British-Egyptian team discovered the stone plaque which was Cleopatra's visiting card in a big underground temple centre. Cleopatra, in turn the lover of Julius Caesar and Mark Antony, lived from 69 to 30 BC.

The find was made in March as Israeli bombers pounded Egyptian army camps a few miles away across the desert.

The inscription bearing Cleopatra's name, written in well-preserved black ink in the old Demotic language, is being closely examined by British experts.

Another inscribed stone bears the name of Alexander the Great, known to have arrived at the nearby Pharaonic capital of Memphis in November, 302 BC.

SERVICE CLUB PROJECT

Zoo to Reverse Cycle

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — Many animals indigenous to Canada's northland will have a brand new home here soon if plans of the Sudbury Kiwanis Club are successful.

The club is planning an elaborate zoo, to be called Noah's Park and possibly costing as much as $1,000,000.

It will be built on a 50-acre site to be provided free by the city, and funds for construction will be raised this year by the Kiwanis Club.

The structure actually housing most of the animals will be called Noah's Ark, and is expected to cost $50,000.

But Dr. W. Y. Watson, a professor of biology at Laurentian University, says the entire project could cost about $1,000,000 because of landscaping and erection of other buildings.

The buildings housing animals will be enclosed by a series of moats rather than by conventional wire fences.

It is expected that animals native to Canada's northland will be the first residents of the new zoo. Exotic animals from other parts of the world will be added later.

Most animals sleep days and go on the prowl at night, but plans call for that life style to be reversed at the zoo.

Soft red lamps will be turned on in the enclosures during the day to allow people to see the animals. But the lights will not be strong enough to simulate daylight and therefore the animals will remain awake.

Much brighter lighting will be used at night to simulate daylight and the animals will sleep, waking up refreshed in the morning to greet the next batch of zoo visitors.

9 IN MEMORIAM

INGRAM—In loving memory of our dear mother, Charlotte Ingram, who passed away April 4, 1966, and our dear dad, Frank Ingram, who passed away May 27, 1948.

They would not ask for sighing,
They would not ask for tears,
But just to be remembered with the passing of the years.

—Their loving family.

JOHNSTON — In loving memory of my wife, Edna Florence Johnston, of Vancouver and Qualicum Beach, who passed away April 6, 1968.

Deep in the heart lies a picture
Of a loved one laid to rest.
In memory's frame we shall keep it,
Because she was one of the best.
—Ever remembered by her husband Charlie and son Burnie.

MASSINGHAM — In loving memory of my wife, Thelma Massingham, who passed away April 4, 1967.

What we would give if we could say,
My wife and mother is coming home today.
To hear her voice, to see her smile,
To sit and talk with her awhile,
To be together in the same old way
Would be our greatest wish today.
Dear Lord forgive a silent tear
A constant wish that you were here,
Others are taken, yes, we know,
But she was ours and we loved her so.
—Always remembered, loved and missed; your husband, daughter and family.

MORRY — In loving memory of our son, Ronald Victor, who was taken suddenly 5 years ago, age 29.

As a boy he climbed a small hill or mountain
As he did when he became a man.
He looked up at the skies, then below.
That day he conquered the tallest mountain
God took him home.
Somewhere we will meet again.
—Dad, Mom and Nanna Morry.

ROSS — In loving and cherished memory of our beloved son and brother, Merville Donald Ross, who passed away April 5, 1964.

Just a spray of beautiful memories
Tied with all our love;
Memories to cherish forever

SEKKEMO — In loving memory of a dear son and step-son, Soren, who passed away April 5, 1969.
Nothing can ever take away,
The love a heart holds dear,
Remembrance keeps him near.
Fond memories linger everyday,
—Always remembered by Dad and Ann.

1,349,712 SQ. INCHES . . . AND EVERY ONE IMMACULATE!

This is a real show home. Even the deep, well-landscaped lot (with fruit trees, too), is extremely well cared for. The home is spacious, spotless and very tastefully decorated. You'll love the large living room with its attractive fireplace, plush wall-to-wall carpeting over hardwood and a tremendous expanse of color-keyed draperies (that go with the home) over windows on 2 adjoining walls. Through double glass doors is a spacious and charming separate dining room with a bay window. The ceramic tile vanity bath is very tasteful and the 3 bedrooms are bright and attractive. A nice-sized rec-room makes a terrific spot for parties. Also in the full basement are a drive-in garage and work and utility areas plumbed and wired for washer and dryer. This is truly an exceptional home in a handy area and is a pleasure to show. Just $25,000 and 8 per cent financing can be assumed.

THE SALESMAN

Anyone buying or selling a home will give some thought to the purpose served by the real estate salesman. The salesman—the good salesman, that is, and most are—is a hard-working person who puts in long hours to be of service to the buyer and the seller of property.

In the first place he is a knowledgeable adviser as to price, saleability, listing methods, etc., whose advice to the prospective vendor is worth while.

When a listing is given, he takes the responsibility for seeing that the property is advertised to best advantage; that, if desirable, other Realtors are alerted to the possibility of a sale, and works with potential buyers to ensure that each is dealt with in proper fashion. He can often prevent unnecessary concern by the vendor by judicious screening of these potential buyers. Advice on the handling of offers received can be perhaps his most valuable service and is freely available, and the close contact between salesman and all the potential buyers gives him a "feel of the marked" for this particular property which cannot be equalled.

He will know a great deal about the legal requirements of completing a sale, and can advise how to have these arranged.

Since a good deal is a deal which is advantageous to both buyer and seller, the good salesman works hard to ensure a deal fair to both. Perhaps we can give further consideration to the relation of the salesman to the buyer another time.

CALLING THE DOCTOR! TO ROCKLAND AREAS NEAR HOSPITALS DESIGNED BY MR. SAM MACLURE

People will say with admiration, "Whose home is this?" They don't build like this any more. The day is long gone when you see houses with such solid construction. Wall to wall graciousness. Like a stately palace it offers character, charm and the dignity of a bygone era. The entrance is majestic with wall-to-wall superb quality carpets over hardwood floors. The curved staircase is grandiose and charming with the great height of beautifully finished ceilings with exposed beams and decorative tapestry. The large living room with its beauty and exquisite high ceiling has an air of friendly charm with its elegant English style fireplace and traditional decor. The huge dining room has warmth and graciousness for your guests or family. The games room or den is especially decorated for ultimate comfort where one can entertain special guests with the facilities of a beautiful bar with mirrors, shelves, special built-in features and beautifully decorated; where one can also enjoy peace and quiet by the fireside of the English style fireplace. The kitchen is a masterpiece with all modern conveniences, large eating area and sun room, where one can serve family or guests and give them the privilege of admiring the beauty of the garden and enjoying the peace and quiet that surrounds this charming glorious home. The master bedroom measures 19' x 15'6" with excellent quality wall-to-wall carpeting, special valances, lovely fireplace, built-in conveniences, huge clothes closets and magnificent curtains and drapes. The lower level has a professional suite with separate entrance and could be ideal for a physician or a family with in-laws or a separate area for extra guests. This gracious home has great character, is in superb immaculate condition with excellent taste in interior finish and has through the whole home a feeling of solidity, beauty and pride of ownership. CHESS MASTER

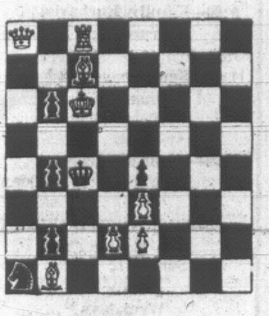
PROBLEM
By Felix Lebrun, France

BLACK: 6



WHITE: 8

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

Grandmaster Oldrich Duras of Prague scored an impressive series of tournament results in the early years of this century. Today, he is mainly remembered for the variation in the Ruy Lopez Opening which bears his name and which became popular a generation later in the modified form 1. P-K4, P-K4; 2. N-QB3, N-QB3; 3. B-N5, P-QR3; 4. B-R4, P-Q3; 5. P-B4.

His style of play was dour and uncompromising. In a 1907 game against Heinrich Wolf, he lost a pawn in the opening but hung on grimly through 168 moves and 22½ hours until Wolf finally checkmated him with two Queens against Duras' lone King. At his best, he was a feared opponent, especially dangerous in complicated middle - games. Following is an example of the Duras Variation.

Played at Carlsbad, 1911:
WHITE: Oldrich Duras
BLACK: Erich Cohn

1. P-K4	P-K4
2. N-KB3	N-QB3
3. B-N5	P-QR3
4. B-R4	N-B3
5. P-Q3	P-Q3
6. P-B4 (a)	P-KN3
7. P-Q4	PxP
8. NxP	B-Q2
9. NxN	PxN (b)
10. O-O	B-N2
11. P-B5	O-O
12. N-B3	Q-K2
13. PxP	PxP
14. P-B3 (c)	P-Q4
15. R-K1	P-Q5
16. N-K2	P-B4
17. N-B4	B-K3
18. P-QN3	KR-Q1
19. N-Q3	B-Q2
20. BxB	NxB
21. B-R3	QR-B1
22. R-QB1	B-B1
23. Q-Q2	Q-R5 (d)
24. P-N3	Q-R4
25. K-N2	P-B5
26. N-B4	Q-K4
27. BxB	P-B6
28. Q-Q3	NxB
29. N-Q5 (e)	RxN
30. PxR	QxP
31. KR-Q1	N-K3
32. QxRP (f)	R-R1
33. Q-K2	P-Q6
34. RxQP	Q-KN4
35. Q-K3	RxPch

41. R(B1)-B7ch	K-R3 (h)
42. Q-K3ch	P-N4
43. PxPch	NxP (i)
44. RxPch	KxR
45. Q-K7ch	K-N3
46. R-N8ch	K-B4
47. RxNch	KxR
48. Q-N7ch	Resigns

(a) Duras intends to choke off Black's counterplay, then seize the centre himself.

(b) Two years before, Rubinstein had played 9 . . . BxN against Duras with good results.

(c) Better 14. R-K1 immediately.

(d) A good try for counterplay.

(e) Threatens 30. P-B4.

(f) If 32. RxP, RxR; 33. QxR, PxQ; 34. RxQ, P-B7.

(g) If 40 . . . K-R3; 41. R (B8)-B2 should win.

(h) Not 41 . . . NxR; 42. RxNch, K-R3; 43. Q-B4ch, etc.

(i) Too bad! 43 . . . PxP draws after 44. QxNch, QxQ; 45. R-B6, R-R8ch.

PIANISSIMO

"Why is it that Taimanov handles both the White and Black so well?" asked Bulgarian Grandmaster Milko Bobotsov at the Hoogoven Tournament Holland, in January. "It's because he is a piano virtuoso!"

Let's face it, Russia's Mark Taimanov, the winner of the event, does know how to handle both sides of the chess board!

Quebec to Probe Investment Warning

MONTREAL (CP) — The man whose comments were cited by a Montreal investment firm in advertising its clients to take their securities outside of Quebec said Friday the provincial government will investigate the firm.

Mario Beaulieu, Quebec's finance minister, announced the investigation at a news conference after publication of a confidential news letter by Lafferty, Harwood and Co. Ltd. sent to its clients last March 18.

Referring to a speech made by Mr. Beaulieu March 16, the firm advised between 200 and 300 clients to remove "physically securities and liquid assets from the province of Quebec—at last until the election (Quebec general election April 29;) is over."

Lafferty, Harwood's investment consultants and stockbrokers service mainly financial institutions in Canada, the United States and Europe.

Mr. Beaulieu said the investigation will be conducted by the provincial department of financial institutions, which is responsible for looking into the conduct of stock brokerage and investment companies.

An official of Lafferty, Harwood said it has nothing to hide from any investigators, since the firm has been cleared by the Quebec securities commission. The firm is a member of the Montreal Stock Exchange as well as the Washington and Philadelphia stock exchanges.

The official said the company merely told its clients what has generally been known for some time in the Montreal financial community—that there is concern about investments in Quebec.

The newsletter, entitled Investment Capital and the Quebec Eelection, refers to a speech Mr. Beaulieu made to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce.

"The speech in our view had deep investment implications," it said. "It must be assumed that the thoughts and views that he expressed are in accord with the thinking of the cabin as a whole."

The Montreal Stock Exchange issued a statement after learning of the confidential document, saying:

SAYS IS ONE OPINION

"The opinion of Lafferty, Harwood and Co. is the personal opinion of one of the 80 members of the Montreal Stock Exchange and as such, does not in any way reflect the opinion of the members as a whole.

"The Montreal exchange respects the rights of its members to express their opinions and this does not engage the responsibility of the exchange and its members."

A meeting of the exchange's governing committee will discuss the matter Monday.

The Lafferty, Harwood official said the company felt it has a duty to its clients to give them accurate advice.

In his speech March 16, Mr. Beaulieu said the 1970s will be a decade of economic revolution in Quebec.

Without altering its encouragement for private enterprise, he said, the "Quebec state" should make every effort to assure full employment for its population.

He said the state should be the central motivating force in the economic revolution. It should be involved everywhere that collective welfare demanded, either by itself or as a partner with private enterprise.

The newsletter said the philosophy outlined by the minister "is unworkable within the economic framework of the North American environment."

"No exhortation by any politician will persuade knowledgeable and intelligent capital that statism will develop an environment for creative prosperity," it said.

"Those individuals or institutions who have a desire or responsibility to protect their wealth from arbitrary government decisions must seriously consider plans to move that wealth from the reach of arbitrary decisions."

Mr. Beaulieu said Friday that less than 25 per cent of the investments made in Quebec are affected by Quebec capital.

REVEALS BOOKS

Lafferty, Harwood is one of the few non-public companies which have made their annual reports public. The company had a net income of $245,150 in 1969, up from $178,372 in 1968.

In its 1969 annual report to clients, the firm said that the Quebec securities commission was tentatively proposing policies "to artificially create capital markets by introducing regulations under which transactions originating in Quebec must, if possible, be executed in the province. All companies seeking to raise capital in the province must apply for listing on the stock exchanges in Quebec.

"These regulations . . . are based on political reasoning rather than that of serving the consumer. They are fundamentally unsound and would only lead to new rigidities by ignoring the principle that the growth of a capital market is retarded if the opportunities are not equal."

TWO-YEAR SENTENCE

Cheque Bouncer Jailed

A 22-year-old man was sentenced to two years in prison Friday when he pleaded guilty to four counts of uttering forged cheques.

Kenneth G. Moorehouse 52 Moss, was on parole when he wrote four cheques during one week in March and received amounts of $20, $45, $65 and $70 for them.

He had an extensive record over the past six years involving false pretences, forgery, unlawfully at large, theft of auto and attempted escape from custody.

Mrs. Kathleen Waring on whose account some of the wortless cheques were writen testified as a character witness for the accused.

She explained that Moorehouse was living with her and her husband on Moss Street while he was on parole and that he had tried to live up to the requirements of the parole.

"It's hard for a person on parole," she said.

Ostler agreed but said he couldn't understand Moorehouse's explanation that he felt pressured by debts into writing the worthless cheques.

"You realize you are in danger of being charged with being a habitual criminal?" Ostler asked the accussed after hearing the past history which he termed a "shocking recored."

Ronald M. Clydesdale, 44, of 3375 Connorton Lane, was sentenced to two years in prison for indecent assualt on a female person.

He pleaded guilty. He had similar previous convictions which Ostler said indicated a "deep-seated abberation."

Gary F. Diehl, 25, of 3280 Galloway, was fined $100 for dangerous driving.

He wasfound guilty of leading Saanich police on a six-mile car chase that at one point reached an estimated speed of 110 m.p.h. early March 2.

Diehl's counsel said his client could not be guilty of dangerous driving as no court had convicted a person of the offence on excessive speed alone.

Police testified that Diehl's car was in excellent mechanical condition.

Ostler said there was much more than speed involved as the accused had driven on narrow roads, some under construction, and had "deliberately incurred risks."

Ostler added that it was speed coupled with other factors notably the human element and this indicated dangerous driving.

Wayne K. Blocka, 19, of 837 Devonshire, was given a suspended sentence and placed on a one-year probation.

He pleaded guilty earlier to stealing a $55 pair of leather pants from The Bay.

He had a previous theft under $50 conviction as well as a drug possession conviction.

Newspapers Told the Story

Local newspapers have been credited with providing the bulk of information for voters prior to last June's Victoria capital budget referendum.

In a post-mortem survey conducted by city hall staffers it was revealed that 41 per cent of those casting ballots gained much or all of their background knowledge from the press.

Nineteen per cent of those surveyed listed newspapers as their total source of information while a further 22 per cent said they obtained their knowledge from the press and a city prepared brochure.

The brochure, mailed to all eligible voters with water bills or tax notices, was credited as the sole source of information by 25 per cent of those surveyed.

Radio hot line shows were listed by eight per cent as top information providers.

Eight per cent said they obtained their information from a brochure, newspaper, radio combination. And 18 per cent weren't sure where they got the word.

Sheffield Pushed To Division Edge

LONDON (CP) — John Morrissey scored a goal worthy of the English League soccer champions today and gave Everton a 1-0 victory over Sheffield Wednesday. The losers are on the brink of dropping into the Second Division next season.

Morrissey whipped the ball home five minutes from the game's end.

Everton, already crowned as English League champion, leads the Division I standings with 65 points with one match to go. Leeds United, 2-1 winner over Burnley, is second with 57 points and two matches still to play.

Everton's victory left four teams at the foot of Division I, all of them wondering who will take the big drop into the Second Division.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

'Immature' a Favorite Insult

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

Today if you wish to disparage a person you say that he is intolerant. Or you say that he has no sense of humor. Or you say he is immature. We do have other formulas of insult, but these three now seem the most fashionable. And the top among them seems to be immaturity one.

I am told that a very effective insult among adolescents is, "How immature can you get!" On the other hand, I once heard a 75-year-old man say of a 71-year-old friend, "He's a good fellow — but awfully immature in some ways!"

ON-GOING PROCESS

In one of his essays Ralph Waldo Emerson referred to "the great enterprise of realizing a personality." That indicates something of what is meant by the word "maturity" when we are using it seriously. Maturity is not so much an achievement as an on-going process in which the potentialities of one's full personhood are gradually realized.

Personal maturity has several dimensions, but the utterly indispensible one is in the nature of one's relations with other persons. This is not to suggest, of course, that for the mature person all of his or her personal relationships will be smooth and easy and gentle and lovely. Human nature — both your's and the other person's — is such that you will never completely avoid tension and conflict and distress in your relations with others. But your maturity will be demonstrated and delineated by the quality of your personal relations — in family and in marriages, at work in recreations and amusements, in community and public affairs.

Creative relationships are possible only among persons with a capacity both to offer love and to receive love. And by love I do not mean a self-asserting, self-satisfying passion or desire, but, rather, the unconditional and active willing of the real good of other persons. St. Paul explicated this kind of love in his famous poem on love in the thirteenth chapter of his first Corinthian letter:

"Love is patient and kind; love is not jealous or boastful; it is not arrogant or rude. Love does not insist on its own way; it is not irritable or resentful, it does not rejoice at wrong, but rejoices in the right."

The mature person, motivated by love, is very careful in his relations with others lest he inadvertently find himself exploiting them for his own selfish purposes. Exploitation of others is never a mark of maturity.

The quest for personal popularity can be dangerous. Everyone, of course, wishes to be liked by others. There is nothing necessarily reprehensible about that, and it can be a thoroughly mature desire. But sometimes we wish others to like us, not primarily in the interests of mature relationships but in the interests of using them rather cold-bloodedly for our benefit.

EXPLOITS PEOPLE

Thirty some years ago Dale Carnegie wrote the book, How to Win Friends and Influence People. It has been one of the best-selling books of all time, and it continues to be reprinted. There is much of genuine good in this book, but I find it, on the whole, a curiously immoral book. It is immoral because much of it is instruction not in creative personal relationships but in how to exploit the other fellow in your interests without his being aware that he is being had.

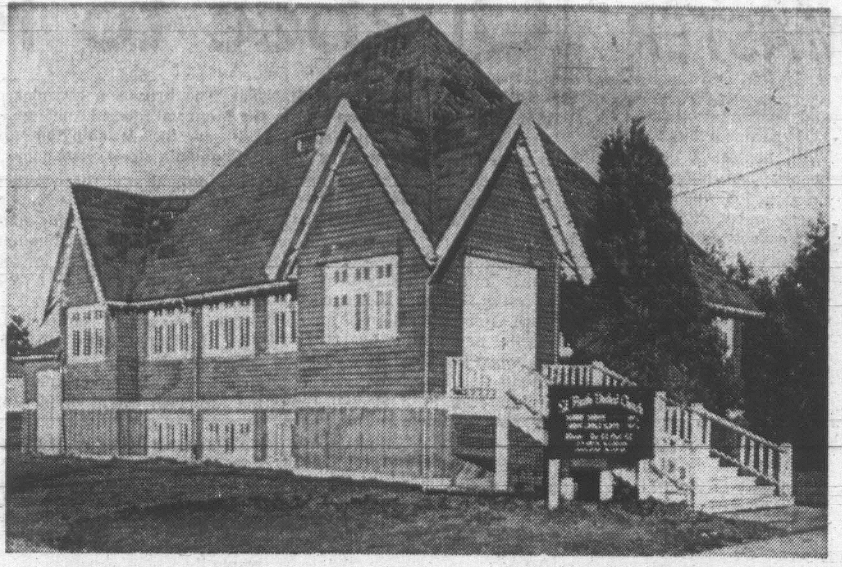
You may believe, of course, that the exploitation of others is necessary to the kind of life you wish to live. But he warned that to the extent that you deliberately set out to exploit others, to that extent you will be denied the joys and satisfactions and deep meanings which come through mature personal relationships. It is one of life's basic truths that you can't have it both ways.

Upgrading Set

EDMONTON (CP) — The provincial government will provide a "fairly sizeable amount of money" for upgrading older schools in Calgary and Edmonton with lesser amounts going to other communities, Education Minister Robert Clark said Thursday night.

Clark told an administration seminar sponsored by the Alberta School Trustees' Association about "areas of concern" in the proposed new Alberta School Act and new provincial school financing regulations.

Slightly more than 200 delegates from school districts, divisions and countries from many parts of the province attended the seminar which continues today.



LANDMARK CHURCH, that of St. Paul's United in Sidney, is now well on way to demolition. Built in 1914, it is being torn down and the land on which it stands is to be used for parking lot. (Photo by Dane Campbell)

Sidney Church Soon to Vanish

By DOREEN HUNTER

St. Paul's United Church, Sidney, is being torn down to makeway for a parking lot.

The lot will serve the adjoining United Church Hall at Malaview and Fifth Street, which replaces the church building.

St. Paul's was built in 1914 as the first Presbyterian church in North Saanich. But in 1920 it became the Union Church uniting the Methodist and Presbyterian congregations.

Under the progressive leadership of Rev. Frederick Letts, Sidney's Union Church continued until 1925 when the United Church of Canada was formed. Since then, St. Paul's has been a United Church.

THREE THERE

When St. Paul's United Church was established in 1925, there were already three Methodist churches in the Saanich area.

Because of its proximity to St. Paul's, the Wesley Methodist Church on Third Street became Wesley Hall, named after its first resident minister, Rev. J. Wesley Miller.

An older church, built in 1895, was Shady Creek on East Saanich Road. The original Methodist church built on property donated by Samuel Brethour Jr. on East Saanich Road, ovposite Mills Road, was torn down in the mid-thirties.

Painted white, with green trim, it boasted a 60-foot tower with an open window in front and was crowned with a three-foot metal floral decoration.

The belfry held a clear ringing bell that, on acalm day could be heard for a distance of two or three miles. This same bell is preserved, with an honor roll and plaque, in the new St. Paul's United Church Hall.

Student to Give Organ Recital

Mary Chard, 16-year-old scholarship student at Victoria Conservatory of Music, will give an organ recital in St. James' Anglican Church, Vancouver, at 3 p.m. on April 12.

Miss Chard is a pupil of organist Richard Proudman and a boarding student at Queen Margaret's School, Duncan.

She played for a year as organist at St. Paul's Garrison Church, Esquimalt.

Ministers Exchange Jobs

Arthur Wilmot, minister of Victoria Unitarian Church is exchanging duties this week with Philip Hewet of Vancouver Unitarian Church.

NO CHANGE FOR 1,000 YEARS

Ancient Dhows Sail On

MOMBASA, Kenya (AP) — Capt. Ahmed Abdul opened his sea chest and took out a large navigational map, which he carefully unrolled.

The legend read: "Compiled by British and foreign governments and current to 1881."

Abdul had improved it, for his use, by having someone ink in Arabic names for the various ports and landmarks bordering the western reaches of the Indian Ocean.

He had just sailed into this ancient seaport with the northeasterly monsoon winds, as sailors have for perhaps a thousand years on sailing dhows virtually identical with Abdul's.

Across the island, on the other side of town, huge cranes on railway tracks were unloading thousands of tons of goods from a dozen modern freighters.

Sonar, radar and modern navigational instruments have enabled today's sailors greatly to improve charts of the Indian Ocean, but the 89-year-old chart is all Abdul needs.

For 40 years, he has been under sail on the Indian Ocean, since he was a boy of 12. Aden, Mogadishu, Mombasa, Dar es Salaam and Zanzibar are all familiar ports to him.

Abdul's was one of the first dhows into Mombasa with this year's northeasterly monsoon winds, known along the coast as "kaskasi."

Last year, a total of 80 seagoing dhows sailed into Mombasa from India, Arabia and Persia before the winds abated.

The winds change in March and they sail home once more, navigating as much by instinct as by chart and sextant.

They bring carpets and dates from Persia, salt and dried fish from Aden, ancient chests from India, and return with mangrove poles, maize, tea and local produce.

Aboard Abdul's dhow, riding gently at anchor as it awaited its turn at the jetty, were 200 tons of salt in sacks piled high in the open hold.

Abdul is from Aziz, Iran. The entire 18-member crew is from Iran.

Each man has his own chest, loaded with personal belongings. All, except ship's officers, sleep where they can on the open deck under canvas awnings which protect them against the sea and burning sun.

Recently, an engine was installed in the traditionally sail-powered dhow, but Abdul still relies on the sail and monsoon winds to bring him across the Indian Ocean.

Students Object To Appointment

OTTAWA (CP) — Placard-carrying students marched Friday in front of the Canada Council building protesting the appointment of Professor Warren Tallman, an American citizen, to the selection panel for the Governor-General's awards in literature for 1969.

The students, associated with Carleton University Professor Robin Mathews, presented a written protest to the Canada Council declaring Tallman to be a "U.S. cultural imperialist."

Union 'Mafia' Tactics Charged

Victoria has potential union members who are frustrated from joining the organization of their choice by a rival union's "Mafia" tactics.

The allegation was made by Joseph Simpson, president of Local 234, Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers, following a meeting of Victoria Labor Council this week.

Simpson told delegates during discussion on a report of the organization committee:

"I've got a hot one for you. A lot of men want to join our union, but they don't for fear their so-called brothers won't let them on job sites."

Simpson, who was speaking about truck drivers delivering to building sites, said the unorganized people to whom he was referring would prefer a Canadian union such as CBRT.

"They don't want a union whose leader is behind bars," Simpson said. "Do we believe in unionism, or mass power in one organization?"

He did not refer to the other union by name, although last year a similar complaint was aired by International Woodworkers of America, some of whose driver members were refused access to construction sites by the Teamsters Union, which claims jurisdiction over all truckers.

FLASHBACK ON CANADA

Macdonald Ducked Imperial Parley

By BOB BOWMAN

History students might like to debate whether or not Sir John A. Macdonald was motivated more by political expediency than what he believed would be good for the nation or the British Commonwealth.

In 1864 Macdonald voted against Confederation of the British North American colonies because he did not believe that the federal government would be given enough power to hold the new nation together. Yet he changed his stand a few days later in order to form a coalition government and avoid a general election.

When Queen Victoria approved the British North America Act in 1866, Macdonald said to her "We have desired in this measure to declare in the most solemn and emphatic manner our resolve to be under the sovereignty of Your Majesty and your family forever."

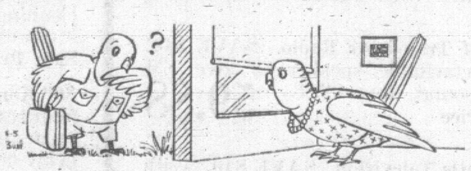
Later on in his career, Macdonald adopted the slogan "A British subject I was born: a British subject I will die" for his election campaigns, and it proved to be successful.

Yet on April 4, 1887, the British government arranged to hold the first Imperial conference as part of Queen Victoria's Golden Jubilee celebrations, but Macdonald declined the invitation to attend. This was unusual because he enjoyed his visits to London and went there as often as possible especially when he needed a rest. He spent other beneficial holidays in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, and Quebec, but London was his favorite place.

Macdonald's excuse for not attending the first Imperial conference (it was called "colonial conference" then) was that he needed to be in Ottawa for the parliamentary session.

However, Britain was trying to promote a system of joint defence and preferential trade among the colonies, and Macdonald did not want Canada to be involved at that time. So he arranged to have Canada represented by Sir Alexander Campbell and Sandford Fleming because he knew they would have little to say. Campbell was an old political war-horse who wanted to become Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. Fleming was a brilliant engineer but had practically no diplomatic experience. They were instructed not to offer Canadain assistance to any general scheme of imperial defence.

The Wonderful World of Animals



By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Brassie, my parakeet, has been moping around badly since her boy friend died of old age. I am thinking of getting her a new companion but wonder if she's too old to appreciate someone new?—N.E.

DEAR M.E.: That's a tough question to answer, particularly when I don't know how old she is. Just because Brassie's buddy was an old timer doesn't, necessarily, mean she's an old hen. There is many an old bird with a young chick under his wing these days. And, anyway, old hens can be happy with someone new, too. Sometimes. Particularly if introductions are made gradually. In fact, the safest method of getting them acquainted would be to put Brassie's new companion in a separate suite but right beside hers. Then you could determine by observation whether Brassie's behavior indicates she wants a bosom buddy, a hen-pecked hanger-on, or a battlefield antagonist.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Hairy legs have always been a problem of mine. I now use, and find quite effective, a chemical hair-removing agent. It softens up the hair so it wipes right off and doesn't irritate the skin on my legs. The thought occurred to me this might be the answer to my poodle's ear problems. Pierre has a problem of hairy ears. Down in the ear canals, I mean. We try to keep the hair plucked out but it's hard to do and we can't get down deep and do it anyway. The doctor in the past told us keeping the hair out of his ears would help prevent ear infection which he has had in the past. I wanted to try my hair removing cream but my husband says I'd better ask the doctor first.—V.M.

DEAR V.M.: Using a chemical hair remover in Pierre's ears could remove the hair, but it could also remove a few layers of the ear canal and cause very severe and painful inflamation, ulceration and infection. Pierre's doctor might, under some circumstances, use a somewhat similar product to remove this hair, but if he did, it would be under very carefully controlled conditions. To be on the safe side, never put anything in your dog's ears without checking it out first.

DEAR DR. MILLER: You should know so you can warn your readers of the shocking thing which happened to me. In a nutshell: I picked up a box at this store and brought it home to use as a puppy pen. I noticed it had a slight odor to it, but the box was clean and just the right size so I didn't think anything about it. I tucked the litter of puppies, five, in the box in the evening, in a cozy corner. The next morning, to my horror, I found them all dead! I couldn't believe it! When I finally came to my senses I took the puppies and box in to the doctor. He checked it out and found the box had been sprayed, or come in contact with, an insect spray strong enough to kill those poor babies even though none of the poison actually showed on the box. That slight odor on the box, was, he said, the actual poison. Where the box was stored they must have used this poison to kill cockroaches or something. It must do a very good job. It certainly kills puppies quick enough. Please warn your readers of this terrible danger.—P.McT.

B.C. LAUNCHES NEW SYSTEM

Deaf Use Telephone Lines

VANCOUVER (UPI)—A system which allows deaf persons using teletypewriters to communicate with each other over long distance telephone lines is now operating into Vancouver, it was announced Friday.

British Columbia Telephone said the system, which originated in the United States, serves 1,000 subscribers, who are able to make calls anywhere on the North American continent.

B.C. Telephone recently donated 20 teletype machines to the Western Institute for the Deaf for use in the hookup. Only two of the teletypewriters are in operation in Canada, both in Vancouver.

"We are using B.C. as a prototype and trust that within a few short years this service will be extended across Canada," said Emmett Casey, executive director of the Western Institute.

Casey said there are over 20,000 deaf persons living in Canada, some 2,000 in B.C., who will be able to communicate long distance using the new service.

He explained briefly how the service works.

A deaf subscriber in for instance, St. Louis wishing to call, say a Vancouver counterpart places his telephone handset onto a specially designed cradle.

The dial tone is immediately transformed into a light signal, indicating the phone is ready to dial. The monitor light tells when the desired number is busy or ringing and when the party answers the telephone.

The Vancouver subscriber knows his telephone is ringing when his monitor light begins to flash. He likewise places his handset into the cradle, turns the power on and types out his name on the teletype machine.

Once contact has been made the conversation is typed back and forth on the teletype units.

"Deafness and hearing impairment are physical disabilities that we hear little about," said Casey. "We are doing our best to inform the public of the plight of these lonely people."

Observatory Opens Doors To Public

The Dominion Astrophysical Observatory's program of Saturday evening public observances will begin tonight and continue until the last Saturday in March.

On a clear night, from 8 to 10 p.m. Standard Time and from 9 to 11 p.m. when daylight saving comes into effect, visitors will get a closer look at the stars and planets from Little Saanich Mountain.

An astronomer will be on hand to give a short talk on what is being seen and to explain the building's operation.

INTERNATIONAL POOL FOR KIDNEY SURGERY

TORONTO (CP) — The kidneys of a Toronto girl were transplanted today into a young married Hamilton woman and a 26-year-old Winnipeg man flown to Toronto for the operation.

The operations were performed in Toronto Western Hospital, and St. Joseph's Hospital, Hamilton, after Carol Lee Robinson, 17, died of a brain hemorrhage Friday night in Wellesley Hospital, Toronto.

At 10:30 p.m. the girl's kidneys were removed; one was rushed to Toronto Western and the other to Hamilton in a police car.

By 1 a.m. today, the kidneys were transplanted and the recipients reported in satisfactory condition.

Names of the recipients were not disclosed.

The hospitals involved are part of a pool of southern Ontario, New York state and Western Canadian hospitals formed to facilitate kidney transplants. The pool matches donors' kidneys to those of recipients throughout the three areas.

Patient Back to Work

MONTREAL (CP) — John Parkinson, 54, who 17 months ago underwent heart transplant surgery, and is Canada's longest surviving patient, announced Friday he's going back to work.

"Can you imagine, after two years off the job, I'm going back," he said in an interview.

The Montreal sales manager received his replacement heart Nov. 3, 1968, in an operation performed by a team of surgeons at Montreal's Royal Victoria Hospital.

Dr. Anthony Dobell said Mr. Parkinson is unique in that he also had a permanent pacemaker implanted post-operatively.

When Parkinson received his replacement heart it was beating at a low rate of 60 times a minute during the day and dropped to 40 beats a minute at night."

A rate of about 80 is considered normal.

"At first the wife was a bit apprehensive. You know, another first. But she was like that the first time I went out by myself," he said.

The only other Canadian surviving heart transplant patient is Charles Perrin Johnston, 56, of Toronto who received his replacement heart Nov. 17, 1968, and reported recently he is feeling fine but has no plans to go back to work.

Most-Asked Questions In Gardening Answered

By JACK BEASTALL

This week we have some general gardening hints which answer the most frequent questions received at this time of year.

A problem facing gardeners over much of this area is soil that is mostly clay. When seed is sown and watered enough for germination, the surface bakes, cracks, and seedling roots exposed.

Most gardening books recommend the addition of sand to break up clay. It may work in some parts of the world where the clay is different from ours, but it does not work here. In fact, it tends to make the clay more difficult to deal with by hand.

Any kind of humus has a much better effect. It breaks up the clay, permits air and water to move more freely, and improves the physical structure.

Humus comes in many forms of which the gardener uses mostly manure and compost. When the supply of either of these is limited, it is a good plan to make small drills for sowing seeds and put in about two inches of humus that has been worked through a half-inch wire screen.

Sow the seed in the usual way right into the humus and gently firm the surface for good contact between humus and seed. Watering can then be done without fear of baking or cracking, and the seedlings have a loose mixture into which a good root system can start.

In the home garden we speak of the succession sowing of vegetables. Succession as used here means sowing a small amount of seed at frequent intervals. It is the opposite of the farming practice of sowing the entire crop at one time and leaving to mature.

The first thing to realize is that our local climate permits the sowing of vegetable seeds in the open garden from approximately April until the end of July, therefore we are not compelled to sow everything on one day or one weekend.

The benefits of succession sowing are:

(1) a steady small supply of a variety of vegetables suited to the family's rate of consumption;

(2) no panic over a glut of one vegetable that must be eaten at once or lost;

(3) less losses to pests because only a few plants will be growing when the main infestation is around.

The length of time that should elapse between sowings depends on location, type of soil, and the micro-climate within the garden.

Early in the season germination and growth is much slower than in late May, therefore sowing can be made at intervals of 10 days to two weeks. As the season advances this period will be stretched to about four weeks, but each gardener has to find out the period best suited to his conditions and his family's food requirements.

Many gardeners wish to rush ahead with the sowing of new lawns as soon as spring is in the air. This is a good idea if the area was prepared last fall and is now reasonably weed free.

Tips for The Home Gardener

On unprepared ground it is better to hold off the sowing and do a little reasoning.

Every gardener's ideal is a lawn without weeds, and this ideal cannot be achieved if we start with soil full of weed seeds.

We shall never be without these plants we call weeds unless our soil becomes so sterile that nothing will grow. The depositing of seeds by various means has gone on for ages, and some of these seeds have been known to germinate after 50 years when given the right conditions.

Every time we turn the soil we bring some of these dormant seeds to the surface where conditions for germination are perfect, and that is why a piece of newly tilled soil is quickly covered with weeds.

The first thing that will appear on a newly prepared lawn area will be weeds and these will grow much faster than the grass seedlings. If we are prepared to spend hours on our knees handweeding there will be no problem. If not, it is better to encourage the weeds to germinate with fertilizer, water, and constant cultivation this summer, and sow our grass seed in reasonably weed-free soil in September.

For a while we thought this weed problem in new lawns had been licked with the introduction of the herbicides (weed-killers), but that dream was soon shattered. As with most labor saving products there were side effects that offset the gains.

We first learned that the growth of young grass is severely inhibited if weed killers are used within six months of seeding. This meant a magnificent stand of weeds that could not be sprayed until temperatures were suitable the following spring. Later it was established that herbicides applied within two years of seeding had a detrimental effect.

As the years passed a mass of documented information showed that the herbicide was carried to other parts of the garden on boots, that plants in borders were affected, and that children playing on sprayed grass suffered ear, eye, nose and skin troubles, and the same happened to household pets.

So the answer to a weed free lawn is the removal of most of the annual seedlings and all the roots of the perennial weeds before the seed is sown, followed by grandfather's method of hand weeding until the turf is thick enough to keep out the weed seeds.

It is much easier to cultivate the area for the summer than to spend time trying to pull out weed seedlings from among the germinated grass.

WORK FOR WEEK

Only the hardiest annual flowers can be sown outdoors now. Included are snaps, godetia, alyssum, clarkia, nicotines, annual dianthus, linaria and viscaria.

Sweet peas sown outdoors now will give late flowers for cutting right into September.

Shrub planting is well completed early this month to avoid drying winds which often come in May and June.

Even though in bloom, rhodos, camellias and other spring blooming shrubs can be successfully planted when bought in containers or when dug from nursery rows and sold with carefully wrapped roots.

Don't neglect watering at roots or newly planted material. In periods of low humidity, a spray of water over foliage during morning hours helps to keep the plant's environment healthy.

In home-raised seedlings in flats, pinch tops from snaps, schizanthus (Butterfly-flower), sweet peas, annual chrysanthemum, annual scabious and salpiglossis. Bushier, more floriferous plants will result.

Early daffodils will be fading, so cut off the old blooms leaving all the foliage to feed the bulbs for next year's flowers. Give one feeding of fertilizer now, water in well.

If garden soil can be worked, sow outdoors: carrots, onions, spinach, swiss chard, early lettuce.

In a coldframe or a seedbox or other protected but cool area, sow seed of fall and summer cauliflower, fall broccoli.

Sow Russian sunflower seeds in plant bands, as they need a long season of growth outdoors.

A load of old manure or well rotted compost on vegetable garden area, forked in with some 6-8-6 before sowing will pay dividends in moisture holding during summer.

RING OF ANVIL SOUNDS

Future Forged from Past

NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE, Ont. (CP) — Two men are literally forging their future out of the past in a makeshift workshop here.

Edwin Thalmann, 39, and Fred Hunt, 49, are using a 150-year-old blacksmith's forge to duplicate antique ironwork. One of their first jobs was a 17th century door spring latch for reconstruction of the old fort of Sainte-Marie Among the Hurons at Midland, Ont.

Hunt, a former millwright with a shipbuilding firm in nearby St. Catharines, has devised a special pair of tongs for production of hand-forged nails. There is a steady demand for them, for use in restoration projects. Hunt recently completed an order of 500 nails, at 16 cents apiece, for a customer in Winnipeg.

Hunt and Thalmann, who studied architecture in Switzerland before coming to Canada in 1955, are collecting old locks, bolts, hasps and clasps, with a view to reproducing them. They have already turned out a variety of candle-burning lanterns and candelabra of the early 1800s.

WON'T MASS-PRODUCE

"We try as much as possible to produce them the same way as they were originally," Thalmann said.

"Looking into the future, I'm afraid we won't be able to handle the demand. But then what we do is custom work. If we start mass-producing, then we are defeating our own purpose."

When Thalmann isn't busy with the forge, he is supervising reproduction of early Canadian furniture or restoration of early Canadian homes and other buildings.

He came to the Niagara Peninsula in 1963 to work on a pilot study of a national inventory of early homes. He and his wife decided to remain when the project was finished.

The partners are awaiting municipal board approval to set up a sales room, restaurant, furniture shop, machine shop and forge in an old canning factory.

Once established in the larger premises, they intend to add other crafts such as weaving, wood carving, pottery and making china, and eventually to offer instruction in these skills.

STAMP NEWS

Scottish Independence Cry Marked

By ROBERT G. OLIPHANT

On April 1, the United Kingdom placed on sale five multicolor pictorials, each one celebrating a notable anniversary.

Marked by the 5-pence adhesive is the 650th anniversary of the Declaration of Arbroath, and it pictures its signing. The king of England, Edward II (1284-1327) having failed to subjugate Scotland, induced the pope to excommunicate Robert the Bruce (1274-1329), the king of Scotland. In reply to that excommunication, the Scotch parliament, assembled in Arbroath in April, 1320, addressed a letter to the pontiff. It forcefully hailed their king, who had done much for his country, and it affirmed Scotland's complete independence.

The 150th anniversary of the birth of the English nurse and philanthropist Florence Nightingale is honored by the 9-pence value. She was born in Florence, Italy on May 15, 1820. From 1854-56 in the Crimean War, she inspiringly nursed the wounded and the sick, and her efforts greatly decreased the fatalities among them. On the stamp she is shown in the British barrack-hospital at Scutari, Turkey. "The Lady with the Lamp" died in London on Aug. 13, 1910.

The 75th anniversary of the International Co-operative Alliance, which is headquartered in London, is commemorated by the 1-shilling denomination. It features the representatives of four of the nations which founded the alliance. They are: Earl Grey (U.K.), M. Charles Robert (France), Prof. Victor Bohmert (Germany), and De Keussler (Russia).

The Mayflower leaving Plymouth, England is portrayed on the 1-shilling 6-pence adhesive which is for the 350th anniversary of its sailing for America. The Pilgrim Fathers, fleeing religious persecution, left Plymouth aboard the Mayflower in September, 1620. (There were around 100 people aboard). In November of that year, it anchored off what is now Provincetown, Mass., and a small landing party briefly went ashore there. Moving on, the Mayflower landed at Plymouth in December, 1620, and the pilgrims founded a settlement there.

The 1-shilling 9-pence multicolor observes the Royal Astronomical Society's 150th anniversary. Featured on this stamp is a facsimile of a telescope and three famed English astronomers, namely, the society's first president, Sir William Herschel (1738-1822), Francis Baily (1774-1844), and Sir John Herschel, Bart. (1792-1871), Sir William's only son.

The preceeding postage stamps were lithographed by Harrison and Sons, Ltd., and embossed on each stamp's upper right hand corner is a silhouette portrait of H. M. Queen Elizabeth II. The 5d, 9d and 1s 6d were designed by Fritz Wegner, and Marjorie Saynor did the other two (1s and 1s 9d).

On March 23, the Pitcairn Islands released four adhesives representing flowers and a silhouette portrait of the Queen. The types of flowers are: 1c, lantana; 2c, Indian shot; 5c, pulau; and 25c, wild gladiolus. Jennifer Toombs designed them, and Thomas de la Rue delacryl printed them on blaock CA watermarked paper.

A 15-ngwee pictorial issued by Zambia March 23 for World Meteorological day pictures the U.S. weather satellite Nimbus II above the earth. (Nimbus II was launched in April, 1969.)

Burned With Victim

HYDERABAD (Reuters) — Villagers burned a man to death on the funeral pyre of a woman he was alleged to have assaulted and murdered in a village in the South Indian state of Andhra, an official report says. Sripathy Kommalu was thrown onto the pyre by the woman's relatives Monday. Police filed proceedings against 10 persons for the burning, but all are missing.

Melody Lingers As Session's Song Fades Out

By BRUCE YEMEN

The song is over, but how much of the melody will linger on?

That's the question left over from the 1970 legislative session which ended Friday.

The Social Credit government brought in a number of bills with a social reform theme in an obvious effort to get more in tune with modern society.

But it was a cautious, loosely-knit composition with a considerable amount of scope for the government to alter the melody by order-in-council.

'Experimental' Bills

There were "experimental" bills aimed at controlling pollution caused by littering, at making adults out of 19-year-olds and at controlling credit card distribution.

There were shifts in "emphasis" to less film censorship, more humane and productive treatment of prison inmates and greater reliance on individuals as the first line of defence against pollution which was by far the most popular topic of MLAs in all parties.

But there was also a continuing reluctance to spend money against pollution.

Perhaps the most certain improvement in social legislation was the overhaul in the Landlord and Tenant Act giving tenants a fighting chance against landlords.

Wide Impact

The reduction of the age of majority to 19 was a simple bill that could have profound impact on life in British Columbia.

But there was a tendency for government ministers to be cautious about their reforms, to say they "hoped" they would work out.

The opposition complained frequently that the government's legislation was loosely drafted, leaving scope for ministerial inaction or discretion or cabinet decision to alter not only the effect of legislation but to defeat its very purpose.

It was more than legislation that could be described as loose.

Played it Cool

In this post-election session, the MLAs played their politics a little looser than they will as the next election gets closer.

Like hockey players in the early season, the politicians often skated around with their heads down and eyes on the puck instead of on the opponents. Nobody got "creamed" this time around.

The most intense, persistent and roughest attacks of the session came from Bob Williams (NDP—Vancouver

FRUITS OF THEIR LABORS

Following are some of the changes in law approved at the 1970 session of the legislature, most of them in effect as of Friday, but a few important ones awaiting future proclamation by the cabinet:

- Reduction of the legal age for adulthood from 21 to 19, to come into effect at a date to be set by the cabinet, probably in a few months. The bill will enable 19-year-olds to drink alcohol, get married without parental consent and to exercise the full range of rights of adults.
- Mandatory two cent refunds for drink containers of glass, tin or other materials, subject to ministerial discretion and coming into effect at a later date when the bill, the new Litter Act, is proclaimed. Stricter controls on dumping of sewage and other trash on public property are also provided.
- New protection for tenants against landlords by putting their relationship on a standard contract basis, thus removing many special landlord privilages such as that of seizing furniture for unpaid rent. Three-month notice required for rent increases under a tenancy agreements and a freeze on rents between Feb. 25 and the coming into effect of the legislation on proclamation by the cabinet at a time yet to be announced.
- Employers' organizations peritted to be accredited for collective bargaining purposes under the Labor Relations Act.
- An overhaul of the Land Act preventing foreign citizens from buying crown land directly from the government and giving new power to remove hippies living on crown land.
- Estate tax exemptions raised to leave most estates tax-free under a value of $160,000 but with charitable estates' 90 per cent taxable for the first time and retro-

Belfast's Heart Rocked by Bombs

BELFAST (CP) — Terrorists exploded three bombs in the heart of Belfast today, injuring at least two persons, despite a British Army warning that troops may shoot to kill when they encounter rioters in the streets. The bombs went off over a span of 10 hours.

The third bomb wrecked a real estate agency in Donegall Street.

The scene of the bombing was only a few hundred yards away from Royal Avenue, where an early morning blast destroyed a large store occupied by a tailoring firm.

Scores of windows in stores and offices were blown out in the Donegall Street blast, which was heard for miles. Ambulances hurried to the area, which was cordonned off by police and troops.

Dozens of screaming girl employees dashed into the street from shops and offices.

Experts and bomb-disposal officers were among the first to arrive on the scene and open investigations.

On being informed of the earlier explosion in Royal Avenue, Prime Minister James Chichester-Clark said "Those responsible for such an outrage showed a complete and callous disregard for human life and property."

Crux Remanded In Vancouver Court

VANCOUVER (CP) — A. G. Duncan Crux, extradited from the Bahamas to face fraud charges involving about $1,000,000, was remanded to Monday when he made a 60-second appearance in provincial court today.

Jack McGivern, lawyer for the 63-year-old lawyer-financier, former president of the now-liquidated Commonwealth Trust Co., said he will make a bail application Monday.

CROWN OPPOSES

The crown said the application will be opposed.

Crux, who said nothing during his brief court appearance, was brought here by commercial jet Friday night and booked into a city jail cell after losing a 10-month battle in Bahamian courts against a Canadian extradition bid.

His last-ditch appeal to the Bahamian governor was rejected this week.

He thus became the second former officer of the B.C.-based Commonwealth financial empire to be brought here to face charges.

Cornelius Polvliet, 59, fofmer director and adviser of the Commonwealth group of companies, was arrested in California Oct. 1, and is in custody here.

He was remanded to Thursday on 17 charges of theft and fraud.

'Loffmark move can only produce lower standards of health care . . . discriminates against a particular segment of labor.' — Government Backbencher

SCOTT WALLACE

Hospital Cutback Shakes Officials

Socred MLA Dr. G. Scott Wallace said today a provincial government edict chopping funds for operating hospitals can only produce lower standards of health care.

The government backbencher and local hospital spokesmen reacted with a mixture of sympathy and frustration today to Health Minister Ralph Loffmark's announcement Friday that the money to meet rising costs just isn't available.

After months of increasingly blunt warnings, Loffmark announced that only 70 per cent of salary increases granted by hospitals for the current year can be met by the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service.

To avoid serious financial problems, he said, hospitals will have to take "immediate action" to reduce costs to pay the other 30 per cent themselves.

Wallace, Oak Bay MLA, said the policy decision comes as news to him and he wasn't involved in discussions leading to it.

No one argues rising hospital costs are a "problem of great dimension" but he questioned Loffmark's method of tackling it.

Hospitals are left with two choices:

- Reduce staff, which in his opinion can only lead to reducing the standard of medical care available.
- Raise the needed money themselves, which is just not practical.

The net effect of Loffmark's ruling, in a roundabout way, is to try and enforce wage restraint on a particular segment of the economy, namely hospital workers, said Wallace.

"While I recognize the need to control hospital costs, I question whether this is the right way."

40,000 March For War

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — Proclaiming "God will give victory," thousands of persons carrying American flags rallied on Pennsylvania Avenue today to demand stronger action to win the war in Vietnam.

The "March for Victory," led by radio preacher Carl McIntire, tied up traffic over a wide area of downtown Washington.

Park police estimated there were 40,000 persons in the crowd that gathered near the Capitol to march to an afternoon rally of speeches, songs and prayer on the Washington Monument grounds.

McIntire, who has accused President Nixon of conducting a "no-win" policy in Vietman, said before the march he expected anywhere from 5,000 to 100,000 marchers.

The marchers carried red, white and blue placards proclaiming "Win The War," "Blockade Haiphong Harbor" and "God Will Give Victory."

Most appeared to be middle-aged. There was a sprinkling of college-age youngsters and small children.

FLASHES 'V'

Heavy police units patrolled the streets around the march area, but there was no heckling or counter-demonstration.

One police officer who drove by in a sqaud car smiled and flashed a "V" for victory sign at fellow officers on the street.

The mood of the marchers was polite and subdued in comparison to anti-war protestors who staged the largest demonstration ever held in the nation's capital last November.

SAUCE FOR GOOSE ISN'T FOR GANDER

What's sauce for the goose isn't necessarily sauce for the gander, a local driver woefully learned in court Friday.

Judge J. A. Byers of the traffic court fined Robert Warren McNally, 22, of Work Point Barracks, $350 and prohibited him from driving for four months for a breath test content over .08 per cent.

Earlier in the day, Judge William Ostler threw out the same charge against John M. Soan, 18, of 315 Alder, because of a Supreme Court ruling Thursday in Vancouver which made the Criminal Code compulsory breath test law null and void.

Shot Shatters Postal Truck

MONTREAL (CP) — As an emergency federal cabinet meeting in Ottawa discussed Montreal's mail dispute, a rifleman in Montreal fired into the windshield of a rented postal truck Friday.

Rejean Masse, an A. F. Baillargeon Express driver who was loading his vehicle in the downtown CNR Bonaventure terminal yards at the time of the incident, said he heard two shots but did not see the culprit. He continued his mail delivery afterwards.

Postal officials said a .22-calibre rifle was apparently used in the shooting.

Meanwhile two other Baillargeon trucks, not hired to carry mail were damaged by vandals Friday. There were no injuries.

In Ottawa, the cabinet was reported to be reconsidering its decision to bring Montreal mail drivers into the public service.

The cabinet meeting began amid reports Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey might tender his resignation over handling of the dispute. However, the minister denied the rumor.

DELIVERIES MADE

Eighty-five rented trucks made deliveries to Montreal's 33 postal substations as the city's former mail truck drivers, unemployed since the government takeover of city mail transportation Wednesday, met for the third day to discuss strategy.

Six rented trucks and an escorting security car were attacked Thursday. Windows were broken, and in two instances, tires were slashed.

Hijack Jet Not Sighted

TOKYO (CP) — North Korea announced a departure time tonight for the return of a Japanese jetliner that flew to Pyongyang with three crew members and a Japanese official as hostages, but the plane was not sighted or heard from long after the announcement.

Japan Air Lines officials indicated Pyongyang might not have the proper ground equipment to start the engines of the Boeing 727.

Beers, Jeers, Laughs and Violence Show at Fort Invasion

Times education reporter Bob Mitchell went to Seattle last Thursday to cover the Indian "invasion" of Fort Lawton, the third in a month. In his report then he told how the Indians, including a contingent of Canadian natives, caught the U.S. Army flatfooted. Today, he relates the "Keystone Cops" side of the conflict, along with the more serious aspects.

By BOB MITCHELL
Times Staff

SEATTLE — The bottle of beer sailed over the 10-foot wire fence that rings Fort Lawton and smacked into the soldier's outstretched palm.

"Nice catch, man, do you play ball?" called Gary Bray from the road that ran outside the fence.

The soldiers hid the bottle in the grass beside his M-16 while his partner holding a two-way radio looked around to make sure no one had seen.

The incident was typical of relations between soldiers who occupy the fort and the United Indians of All Tribes who have besieged it since March 10.

Officially the soldiers and MPs are under orders to patrol the 1,100-acre, forested fort and arrest any Indians who get inside.

Unofficially most of them hope the Indians win the struggle to get full administrative authority of the fort when it is abandoned by the military later this year.

Some 80 Indians were detained and later released Thursday during the third invasion of the fort since early March.

Gary Bray, one of the UIAT leaders, was released around 2 p.m. He laughed as he told of the chase inside.

"Me and about 19 guys circled down by the ballpark, and the MPs saw us and laid down some gas.

"But the wind blew the gas back at them and we got back into the woods.

"I was layin' down in some bushes and one of them passed about two feet away from me. I was smoking a cigarette and he says: 'They must be around here, I can smell one of them'."

To a white person the game of hide-and-seek the Indians played with the army probably sounds about as serious as The Keystone Cops.

But there has been some violence. Early in the siege a young demonstrator who was talking outside the main gates with some MPs was suddenly grabbed, pulled inside and beaten.

Two men drove past one night brandishing guns and promising to come back to kill.

And a tavern near the fort has refused to serve the Indians.

Leaders of the UIAT conceded most of army personnel are genuinely sympathetic to their cause. But while the Indians are unarmed the army has tracking dogs, tear gas, anti-personnel radar and the usual assortment of guns.

One reason for army restraint has probably been close coverage of the siege by Seattle news media and public opinion favorable to the Indians.

Glamor Issues Take Clouting

NEW YORK (AP)—The New York stock market, ambling listlessly in slow trading, wound up this week just about where it started.

About the only major development was that the formerly high-flying glamor issues took a clouting.

Analysts said this apparently was due to investors' concern about the dim outlook for corporate profits, which has been a major market depressant.

Even though the market as a whole was generally stagnant, some brokers viewed the situation as not discouraging after the 27-point gain by the Dow Jones industrial average the previous week on a decline in interest rates.

Some said the market's firmness indicated a consolidation phase which could lead to a sustained advance.

The only sessions in which there was some action were Monday and Wednesday.

For the week, the Dow industrials edged up 0.79 to 791.74. The Associated Press 60-stock averaged added .9 at 279.7. The New York Stock Exchange index of some 1,200 common stocks dipped 0.33 to 49.70. Standad and Porr's 500-stock index was off .53 to 89.39.

Bond Prices Firm

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian bond market ended the week on the firm side, closing higher in active trading Friday.

Most issues were up fractionally over last week.

The average yield on the three-month Government of Canada treasury bills ended a two-month decline when they rose to 7.02 per cent Thursday. Friday, however, they slipped back to 6.99 per cent.

Next week's offering of three-month treasury bills will be increased to $130,000,000, up $5,000,000 from the present offering.

Royal Trust Mortgage introduced a new issue Wednesday totalling $15,000,000.

The 9½-per-cent, April 15, 1976 and April 15, 1980, issue is now selling at par.

Day-to-day money closed Friday at 6¾ per cent, the lowest rate of the week.

Three-and six-month treasury bills traded at 6.99 and 6.70 per cent respectively.

Bond prices continued to be supported during March as interest rates eased and average yields on debentures declined.

The 40-bond average yield reported by McLeod, Young, Weir and Co. Ltd. dropped .08 per cent from February, which in turn was down from January, but at 9.35 per cent was still 1.05 per cent higher than March 1969.

The biggest change was in the municipal group which dropped .12 per cent to 9.63 per cent; provincials fell .1 per cent to 9.21 per cent; utilities .06 to 9.32 per cent, and industrials .04 to 9.24 per cent.

Canadian Markets Ride Waves of Rate Cut

By NICK FERRIS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Canadian stock markets moved ahead moderately this week, riding the waves of last week's prime lending rate reductions in the United States.

Markets rose sharply late last week after several large American financial institutions cut their prime rates to eight per cent from 8½.

A drop in prime rates — the interest charged to a bank's best customers — could mark the easing of tight monetary conditions that have depressed markets since last June.

Canadian markets were strong Tuesday following removal of a temporary restriction on the outflow of short-term Canadian funds imposed last July and stiffened in January.

Louis Rasminsky, central bank governor, said Monday the bank was withdrawing a special request made last July to Canadian financial institutions, limiting the volume of funds being lent abroad in form of swapped deposits.

Swapped deposits are funds converted into foreign currency, usually U.S. dollars, which have been placed on term deposit with a bank and which the bank has undertaken through a forward contract to convert back into Canadian dollars at maturity.

The swapped deposit technique becomes attractive when foreign interest is high, providing a better return than that of a domestic instrument.

When the temporary ceiling on swapped deposits was announced last July, the Bank of Canada bank rate was increased one-half point to a record eight per cent at the same time.

There was no mention of a reduction in the bank rate this week, but some observers expect a reduction could come within a few months.

A Bank of Canada bank rate cut would be followed by a prime rate reduction and would loosen the federal government's stranglehold on monetary conditions, imposed to fight inflation.

Canadian markets advanced for three consecutive sessions after the removal of the swapped deposits restrictions before dropping back Friday.

Statistically, on index at the Toronto Stock Exchange, the industrial index rose 1.18 to 185.52, golds 14.75 to 173.86, base metals 4.68 to 117.51 and western oils 1.82 to 195.59.

Volume was 11,286,000 shares comparedd with 10,202,000 last week. Gains outnumbered losses 436 to 311 with 243 issues unchanged.

On the Montreal and Canadian exchanges, the composite index was up 3.36 to 183.26. Combined volume was 7,364,000 shares compared wity 5,111,000 last week.

City Manager Confident No-Frills Budget to Pass

By JIM HUME

City manager Dennis Young said today he is confident objections to last June's capital budget program have been eliminated.

In modified form the five-year "plan for progress," trimmed by more than $2 million since June 28, 1969, goes to the people again on April 30.

Last June the city asked 17,939 registered property owners to endorse the $8,588,000 five-year borrowing plan.

Only 3,934 voted, 21.95 per cent of the eligible list. And of those 52 spoiled their ballots, leaving a legitimate vote total of 3,882 of which 2,318 voted "no" and 1,564 "yes."

The total vote was less than 1 per cent lower than when the first five-year capital budget vote was called in 1964. But the mood of the voters had changed.

In 1964 with 18,612 eligible voters on the list, 4,174 (22.4 per cent) cast votes. Of that total 78.7 per cent voted in favor of an orderly plan for borrowing.

Confident in that first showing, and sure that the visible signs of progress in the city were more than enough proof of the success of that first five-year plan, city officials approached June 28, 1969, without qualms.

Their confidence was unjustified, the people's "no" loud and clear.

It took a few weeks to shake off the shock of rejection.

Then the post-mortem began.

"Obviously something had gone drastically wrong," Young says. "We didn't know what. Everybody we talked to had a different theory, most of them contradictory.

"Two things were certain: we had to go to the people again because a five-year plan really is essential; and we had to find out before then just what went wrong."

By September, Young had his answers.

Some were predictable, some surprising. All came from people who voted.

Of the voters questioned during the survey period, 43 per cent had voted in favor of the five-year plan and 57 per cent against, close enough to the actual results (40.28 per cent for, 59.72 per cent against) to give authenticity to the survey.

"We wanted to know why the people had been so strongly opposed to the June plan," Young says. "And we wanted to know what they were looking for in the way of progress."

Surprisingly enough the parks and recreation vote drew the strongest objections, the roads and sewer programs most praise.

One of the main items in the June budget was a $162,000 community centre for Beacon Hill Park designed to provide recreational facilities for the elderly and change rooms and meeting rooms for cricketers and bowlers.

Young admits the project was icing on the cake.

"We felt that to be successful a five-year capital budget must contain some funds for improving recreational facilities, for providing more outlets for leisure use," Young said.

"We were badly mistaken.

"The survey told us that, beyond doubt, most people felt that Beacon Hill Park improvements were not an essential expenditure at this time.

"A typical reaction was 'Why should the taxpayers pay to build sports facilities just for bowlers and cricketers?' Others felt that Beacon Hill Park was used primarily for tourists and had enough money spent on it anyway.

"It shook us a little, just as the survey's revelation that most of the people voting against the budget regarded our Pioneer Square beautification plans as a low-priority item."

But if parks and beautification had a rough ride, roads and sewers received almost total blessings from the people surveyed.

"We were told in no uncertain terms that the people wanted better roads, that's why on April 30 more than half of the five-year budget is earmarked for that purpose," Young says.

All issues were not as clear cut in the minds of voters as parks and roads.

"There was considerable confusion in the minds of many voters on just what the issues were," Young said. "unfortunately around the time of the vote the proposed convention centre controversy was rife.

"It never was a part of the capital budget, but at least 10 per cent of the people surveyed felt that it was—and they were unanimously opposed to it.

"Another cause for resentment came from 13 per cent of those surveyed who told us that on voting day they were still angry over increased assessments. They had been told that the mill rate would be held and therefore had felt that assessments and taxes would not increase.

"It had nothing to do with the June 28 vote, but it was obviously disastrous."

Young was asked if last June's vote had shown any positive "yes-or-no" patterns in specific areas of the city.

"Strangely enough the breakdown revealed no significant pattern," he answered. "The opposing voters were side by side all through the city.

"There was a similar pattern in the vote breakdown by income. In the high income bracket 42.8 per cent voted for the budget, 57.2 per cent against.

"In the middle income bracket the vote went the other way by about the same percentage, 53.6 per cent for, 46.4 per cent against.

"The only significant gap showed in the low income group where 31.1 per cent voted in favor and 68.9 per cent against.

"These figures, of course, apply only to the voters contacted by our survey team, not the total vote."

To test general knowledge on budget issues the city survey staff designed a quick quiz.

People who could recall from memory five or more items from the five-year plan were given a "complete comprehension" rating. Recalling three to five items gained a "good" rating; one to two, "medium comprehension" and little or no idea a "low comprehension" score.

Having established the comprehension rate the survey revealed that 44 per cent of those contacted were in the top category, 31 per cent "good," 19 per cent "medium" and 6 per cent "low."

"And that led to an intriguing discovery," Young said. "Of those with high comprehension of what it was all about, 40.4 per cent voted in favor and 59.6 per cent against.

"In the second bracket 55.6 per cent of those with a good knowledge approved the budget, 44.4 voted against. In the medium knowledge group 35 per cent were in favor, 65 per cent against.

And in the low-knowledge group, people who admitted they just didn't understand what it was all about, the negative vote was 100 per cent."

Major Work on Finlayson Street Proposed

Too Many No-No's By Natives

It was the "natives" who were restless when Victoria sought approval of its five-year capital budget last June.

A city survey team conducting a post-mortem survey following defeat of the plan reported that "the people with the largest number of objections were invariably natives of the city. In many cases they resented 'newcomers'.

On the other hand people who had come here to retire liked the city and thought the municipal tax burden was lighter than other Canadian cities.

Council Solid on Budget 'At Least Until Tomorrow'

Victoria city council will present a solid front to the people on the five-year $6.3 million capital budget referendum.

"At least until tomorrow," says Ald. Hugh Ramsay.

Ramsay made the statement Friday after a meeting called to iron out the techniques of distributing information on the budget blew up into a losing final-hour bid to trim capital expenditure programs by close to $1 million.

Ald. Tom Christie dropped the bombshell minutes after Mayor Courtney Haddock had assured the press it could go home "because all we'll be discussing today is the mechanics of how to get the word to the people."

Christie, defeated Thursday in an attempt to cut $743,000 from the five-year road-building program, said he had been assured by traffic engineer Dave Campbell, city manager Dennis Young and treasurer James Bramley, that all three would be happy to see the cuts made.

"I think," said Young, "that Ald. Christie has taken a little licence with the remarks of the traffic engineer. What Mr. Campbell said was 'if there must be cuts in the road budget, then they should be in this particular area.'

"But that does not mean he is in favor of the cuts.

"On the contrary he feels the budget should remain as it is."

Christie wanted council to eliminate from the five-year plan proposals to widen and improve Vancouver from Pembroke to Pandora $370,000), Heywood Avenue widening from Rupert to Southgate $30,000) and work on Finlayson from Blanshard to Cook $343,000).

On the vote only Christie voted in favor of the cuts.

More protests were to come before council got down to the "mechanics" of information dissemination.

FAILED AGAIN

Ald. Harold Olafson, defeated Thursday in his effort to get a fire-fighting training centre trimmed from the program, said he'd like to make one more attmept to reverse council's decision.

He failed again but only by virtue of the rules which state that on a tied vote a motion is lost.

Backed by Aldermen Peter Pollen, Cecil Parrot and Christie, Olafson said he was all for a training centre "but not now and not to the cost of city taxpayers."

Voting against his bid to trim the training centre from the budget were Mayor Haddock and Aldermen Hugh Ramsay, Percy Frampton and Ove Witt.

'DISGUSTS ME'

Ramsay, who had little to say on Christie's attempt to cut road building expenditures, said he was trying hard "to compose myself on this . . . much of the procedure here this afternoon disgusts me. Why in hell weren't these things laid on the line yesterday?

"These aldermen (Pollen and Olafson) keep saying they've been told overnight that this training centre will defeat the capital budget.

"If they have been told that I'm sure they have been told by people who know virtually nothing about its need.

"This proposal has gone through the policy review committee. It was approved yesterday after I thought we did a good job. I think it's time we showed some guts and got on with the job."

Ramsay said it was essential that the city had somewhere to train rookie firefighters "other than at an actual fire."

'PRETTY DEFLATED'

Ald. Ove Witt said he couldn't understand the attempts by Pollen, Olafson and Christie to make changes in the budget after Thursday's debate and decision.

"I left her yesterday afternoon full of optimism and ready to get the message out," he said. "I came back here today, still optimistic—but I'm pretty deflated right now.

"I'm in favor of getting on with the job. I thought we all were. Let's get on with it."

Haddock, who later cast the deciding vote on the fire-training centre, said the second go-round of argument was good.

"You have to tear a product apart before you can back it," he said.

"We did that yesterday," retorted Witt.

With both cut attempts defeated the capital budget program remains at $6,613,000, an increase from the original $5,570,000 but sharply cut from June's $8.5 million.

Voting day will be April 30.

If approved the budget gives the city the authority to borrow money for specific projects without going to the people on each individual effort.

YES-NO'S SHOW CONFUSED VOTERS

When the City of Victoria asked property owners to approve an $8.5 million capital budget last June they got a solid "no" answer.

A few weeks later a city survey team asked "did you feel that spending $8.5 million over five years was too much?" and heard "definitely, yes, much-to-much money," in reply.

A little later in the interview they asked whether voters would have felt more kindly to a $1.7 million a year expenditure over five years.

And to that they got the positive "yes, that would be all right."

All of which leaves city manager Dennis Young and treasurer James Bramley a little bewildered. It adds up to the same amount.

They point out that's what a capital budget is all about.

"You don't borrow the money and spend it tomorrow," Young says. "You merely get the permission of property owners to borrow the money, year by year, to carry out an orderly and easy to finance series of capital projects."

Saanich Planner Slams Province

By ROGER STONEBANKS

The provincial government has "consistently avoided any role of leadership" in facing up to urban problems, says Saanich planner Tom Loney.

The legislature appears to be dominated by rural values, he says, and the problems of growing cities receive scant attention.

And the record of cooperation with local government in development works by government and crown corporations "can only be characterized as poor."

Loney's opinions are contained in the 1968-69 municipal planning department report.

"In making this observation," he says, "we do not single out British Columbia for a special award but apply it to virtually all provincial governments."

MAJOR BURDEN

The lack of firm development control in unorganized (non-municipal) territory under provincial jurisdiction "is something we will all have to pay for and will pose a major burden on the regional district concerned that will be partly borne by the municipalities."

Loney said B.C. Hydro's plan to put a major transmission line the height of a seven-storey building through Saanich and Victoria is "nothing short of monstrous."

To keep initial costs to the minimum, the overhead line "will tear its way though urban areas with no consideration given to what it does to living amenities, the fabric of the community or future property values.

"Areas along the route will, in future, develop to the densities now existing, for example, along Cook Street south of Fort Street. Picture a 132,000-volt transmission line on 70-foot towers in this area and consider that other major routes in the metropolitan area are planned for the future."

RESTRICTED

Loney said the powers and resources of local and regional government depend heavily on senior governments. Financial resources open to local government are very restricted. No serious attempt has been made to permit the local government wider financial powers and no significant increases in aid from senior governments have been forthcoming.

"Even if we could tighten up our development pattern to minimize municipal development costs (a process which is hampered by restricted legislative powers) there would still be insufficient finances available to local government to meet its committments and problems," he said.

The enabling legislation for planning matters, mainly contained in the Municipal Act, was described by Loney as permissive and broad.

This meant a municipality could do virtually as much or as little as it wished. Government and civil service had adopted a philosophy of the less direction the better.

"Consequently, each municipality tends to go its own way with little guidance as to comprehensiveness and integration. Planning is also considered to be an optional extra rather than a basic aspect of sound municipal government," he said.

. . . 'monstrous'

Zoning was quite limited in scope and subdivision legislation contained few meaningful standards.

Loney said senior government should lead, and not say in effect "here is what you may do if you feel like it."

Looking to the future, Loney said the world is changing rapidly yet man is extremely stubborn about changing his ways and outlook.

"The growing spectres of uncontrolled population growth, shortage of resources, environmental deterioration and ecological breakdown leading to irreparable damage to our water and our air, suggest that we must either develop an entirely new perception of living by the end of the century or we must face the strong possibility of extinction," he said.

Possibly the heritage of "frontier individualism" is too strong, man is perhaps too selfish to seriously think of society as a whole.

"We urgently need a sense of co-operation and a new sense of purpose — a true comprehensiveness in looking at our problems and our choices. We also need a sense of urgency, a commitment to act before it is too late.

"It may well be that the Sixties will be seen as the period in which man succeeded in defining the problems and possibilities he has created through his own actions and through his increased self-awareness, began to learn how to avoid the diasters which now seem inevitable," he said.

Loney said some of the views expressed may not reflect opinions and policies of council, but to a certain extent his purpose is to generate debate.

In Saanich, he said growing demands are being made upon the municipality which, like others, faces "the gigantic problem" of how to pay for services and facilities.

Research had shown that single-family housing pays its way in terms of revenue received to cover costs of services provided "only under the most favorable circumstances."

Apartments, industry and commercial enterprises customarily provided the bulk of revenue. Yet Saanich has few apartments, industry is negligible (and prospects remote) and the major commercial areas serving Saanich (downtown and two regional shopping centres) are in Victoria city.

REGIONAL BASIS

The most conventional approach to this is that Saanich must attract more industry, but he said this appears to offer little hope and to be of dubious desirability.

More promising was a closer move to regional government, with services and facilities being provided and paid for on a regional basis.

"This is under way in some instances but it is unlikely to offer a complete answer within the near future and it may prove desirable to maintain a level of local servicing and financing," he said.

"A much more immediate and important lesson to be learned and borne in mind constantly is that Saanich must be particularly careful in its development and servicing actions."

Arthur Mayse . . .

LET US COMMENCE WITH the case of Cordova Bay Elementary School playground, on which the bulldozers have been busy these last few days. At the back of the school, an eye-pleasing expanse of grass is to be replaced with an earth-concrete mix.

"What's the point of it?" asks a vexed and puzzled householder who feels that the green carpet should have been left in place.

"When they were building that school," this long-time resident remembers, "they kept trucks busy carting the topsoil away.

"Later, they fetched in another batch of topsoil, and planted the playground in grass. That was about two years ago.

"Now, when the grass is nicely established, darn if they aren't ploughing it all up so they can lay down a hard surface. And when I ask the school district the reason for the change, all I get is a run-around."

Not so, says a school district spokesman. The grass in question may have looked pretty at a distance. But it was a mistake.

"It was too close up to the school," he explained, "and when you put grass where 400 students are going to spill out onto it at recess and noon-hour, the result is going to be mud. So we're hard-surfacing part of that area, but the neighbors who appreciate grass needn't worry. We'll have plenty of it on a piece of land we've added to the school grounds. With that addition, we'll have a nice grassy field for soccer and other sports."

Sounds a little like robbing Peter to pay Paul, but that's the grass-roots account, and there we leave it.

If you agree that prevention is better than cure, it may interest you to know that Victoria is to have a health-education centre open to all who wish to use its services.

The centre, which has been in the works for a number of months, is located opposite Hillside Shopping Centre at 3019 Shakespeare Street. Opening is set for 1:30 p.m. Wednesday, April 8.

Purpose of the centre, says Rest Haven Hospital Administrator Tom Bradley, is to utilize the professional knowledge of capital region medical men in a preventive program designed to ward off illness before it starts.

The program, Bradley tells me, has been pre-checked by Victoria Medical Association executive. It will consist of lectures, films, and individual counselling by doctors taking part. The service, offered afternoons and evenings, is free in all particulars save one.

Smokers who enroll in a five-day course designed to wean them from the weed will be required to pay $10.

"The psychology there," says Brandley, "is one of incentive. The person on the course may be less prone to wavering if he realizes that he wastes his fee by doing so."

Although the centre is under Seventh Day Adventist sponsorship, Tom Bradley emphasizes that it is to be undenominational in scope and character.

What's offered is not a clinic for the treatment of ailments. The idea, which strikes me as a sound one, is to provide the education that will help keep health problems from developing.

A COUPLE OF YEARS ago, I told you about Mair and Ed, outdoors-minded friends who trailered west from Ottawa on a year-long honeymoon. They settled in West Vancouver, and we thought of them as rooted there until a letter arrived this week.

Mair has quit her job. Ed leaves his at the end of the month. Then they hook up their trailer and shove off, so help me, for at least three years of roving and fishing.

Summers, they'll wander British Columbia. They'll winter south. And wherever their mood takes them, they will be tapping fish-infested lakes and streams.

I'm not envious! After all, what would life be without lawns to mow, leaves to rake, and other such disciplines that are the anchored householder's lot?

But just in case we also find ourselves gypsying around the countryside some year, we've asked them to send along a breakdown of their monthly costs.

When we get it, I'll pass it along.

Grandmaster Oldrich Duras of Prague scored an impressive series of tournament results in the early years of this century. Today, he is mainly remembered for the variation in the Ruy Lopez Opening which bears his name and which became popular a generation later in the modified form 1. P-K4, P-K4; 2. N-QB3, N-QB3; 3. B-N5, P-QR3; 4. B-R4, P-Q3; 5. P-B4.

His style of play was dour and uncompromising. In a 1907 game against Heinrich Wolf, he lost a pawn in the opening but hung on grimly through 168 moves and 22½ hours until Wolf finally checkmated him with two Queens against Duras' lone King. At his best, he was a feared opponent, especially dangerous in complicated middle - games. Following is an example of the Duras Variation.

PIANISSIMO

"Why is it that Taimanov handles both the White and Black so well?" asked Bulgarian Grandmaster Milko Bobotsov at the Hoogoven Tournament Holland, in January. "It's because he is a piano virtuoso!"

Let's face it, Russia's Mark Taimanov, the winner of the event, does know how to handle both sides of the chess board!

Quebec to Probe Investment Warning

MONTREAL (CP) — The man whose comments were cited by a Montreal investment firm in advertising its clients to take their securities outside of Quebec said Friday the provincial government will investigate the firm.

Mario Beaulieu, Quebec's finance minister, announced the investigation at a news conference after publication of a confidential news letter by Lafferty, Harwood and Co. Ltd. sent to its clients last March 18.

Referring to a speech made by Mr. Beaulieu March 16, the firm advised between 200 and 300 clients to remove "physically securities and liquid assets from the province of Quebec—at last until the election (Quebec general election April 29;) is over."

Lafferty, Harwood's investment consultants and stockbrokers service mainly financial institutions in Canada, the United States and Europe.

Mr. Beaulieu said the investigation will be conducted by the provincial department of financial institutions, which is responsible for looking into the conduct of stock brokerage and investment companies.

An official of Lafferty, Harwood said it has nothing to hide from any investigators, since the firm has been cleared by the Quebec securities commission. The firm is a member of the Montreal Stock Exchange as well as the Washington and Philadelphia stock exchanges.

The official said the company merely told its clients what has generally been known for some time in the Montreal financial community—that there is concern about investments in Quebec.

The newsletter, entitled Investment Capital and the Quebec Eelection, refers to a speech Mr. Beaulieu made to the Montreal Chamber of Commerce.

"The speech in our view had deep investment implications," it said. "It must be assumed that the thoughts and views that he expressed are in accord with the thinking of the cabin as a whole."

The Montreal Stock Exchange issued a statement after learning of the confidential document, saying:

SAYS IS ONE OPINION

"The opinion of Lafferty, Harwood and Co. is the personal opinion of one of the 80 members of the Montreal Stock Exchange and as such, does not in any way reflect the opinion of the members as a whole.

"The Montreal exchange respects the rights of its members to express their opinions and this does not engage the responsibility of the exchange and its members."

A meeting of the exchange's governing committee will discuss the matter Monday.

The Lafferty, Harwood official said the company felt it has a duty to its clients to give them accurate advice.

In his speech March 16, Mr. Beaulieu said the 1970s will be a decade of economic revolution in Quebec.

Without altering its encouragement for private enterprise, he said, the "Quebec state" should make every effort to assure full employment for its population.

He said the state should be the central motivating force in the economic revolution. It should be involved everywhere that collective welfare demanded, either by itself or as a partner with private enterprise.

The newsletter said the philosophy outlined by the minister "is unworkable within the economic framework of the North American environment."

"No exhortation by any politician will persuade knowledgeable and intelligent capital that statism will develop an environment for creative prosperity," it said.

"Those individuals or institutions who have a desire or responsibility to protect their wealth from arbitrary government decisions must seriously consider plans to move that wealth from the reach of arbitrary decisions."

Mr. Beaulieu said Friday that less than 25 per cent of the investments made in Quebec are affected by Quebec capital.

REVEALS BOOKS

Lafferty, Harwood is one of the few non-public companies which have made their annual reports public. The company had a net income of $245,150 in 1969, up from $178,372 in 1968.

In its 1969 annual report to clients, the firm said that the Quebec securities commission was tentatively proposing policies "to artificially create capital markets by introducing regulations under which transactions originating in Quebec must, if possible, be executed in the province. All companies seeking to raise capital in the province must apply for listing on the stock exchanges in Quebec.

"These regulations . . . are based on political reasoning rather than that of serving the consumer. They are fundamentally unsound and would only lead to new rigidities by ignoring the principle that the growth of a capital market is retarded if the opportunities are not equal."

Bertrand Kicks Off Provincial Campaign

By PIERRE VENIOT

MONTREAL (CP) — The reception got warmer as the evening wore on Friday when Premier Jean-Jacques Bertrand took some verbal shots at the federal government—a prelude to officially opening his campaign for the April 29 Quebec general election.

Mr. Bertrand, who holds a policy meeting tonight before hitting the hustings Sunday, attacked Ottawa on its anti-inflation policies and what he considered its rigid constitutional stand.

In a rapid-fire tour of three ridings west of Montreal, the Union Nationale premier was first greeted by about 200 persons—remarkably few of them young—in a small Vaudreuil schoolhouse, had supper with a handful of party faithful at a posh golf club and drew a rousing reception in Valleyfield.

He also headed for Chateauguay.

At St. Michel school in Vaudreuil-Soulanges riding, Mr. Bertrand said the Union Nationale government had instigated constitutional reform back in 1967 when the late Daniel Johnson, then Quebec premier, voiced Quebec's position at a constitutional conference in Toronto.

But because of Ottawa's "intransigence, arrogance," Quebec could expect growing support from other provinces, a statement he qualified in an interview.

At the last federal-provincial conference in Ottawa this year, Premier John Robarts of Ontario and Manitoba's Ed Schreyer had assured him of their support if Quebec made certain demands in "particular fields."

"The Union Nationale," he had said in his speech, "will pursue this reform with the other provinces who seek a frank dialogue."

At a hall in Chateauguay, jammed with about 700 persons, Mr. Bertrand got his loudest reception after a firebrand speech on economics, the constitution and the Union Nationale.

BLAMES OTTAWA

He said Quebec had gone through a recessionary period after Expo 67 that increased unemployment. But he blamed that situation on "the anti-inflationary policies of the federal government."

And Ottawa's hard-line approach to economic ills was even striking the already hard-pressed Maritimes.

On the question of Quebec separating from Canada, Mr. Bertrand said in Vaudreuil this would not be done by economist-supporter Jacques Parizeau of the separatist Parti Quebecois, Liberal Leader Robert Bourassa or even himself.

"The people will decide in a referendum. It is you who will decide . . . the future of Quebec."

He drew a roar of approval from the Chateauguay crowd when he said:

"If we take Quebec out of Canada, what will happen to Canada?"

TWO-YEAR SENTENCE

Cheque Bouncer Jailed

A 22-year-old man was sentenced to two years in prison Friday when he pleaded guilty to four counts of uttering forged cheques.

Kenneth G. Moorehouse 52 Moss, was on parole when he wrote four cheques during one week in March and received amounts of $20, $45, $65 and $70 for them.

He had an extensive record over the past six years involving false pretences, forgery, unlawfully at large, theft of auto and attempted escape from custody.

Mrs. Kathleen Waring on whose account some of the wortless cheques were writen testified as a character witness for the accused.

She explained that Moorehouse was living with her and her husband on Moss Street while he was on parole and that he had tried to live up to the requirements of the parole.

"It's hard for a person on parole," she said.

Ostler agreed but said he couldn't understand Moorehouse's explanation that he felt pressured by debts into writing the worthless cheques.

"You realize you are in danger of being charged with being a habitual criminal?" Ostler asked the accussed after hearing the past history which he termed a "shocking recored."

Ronald M. Clydesdale, 44, of 3375 Connorton Lane, was sentenced to two years in prison for indecent assualt on a female person.

He pleaded guilty. He had similar previous convictions which Ostler said indicated a "deep-seated abberation."

Gary F. Diehl, 25, of 3280 Galloway, was fined $100 for dangerous driving.

He wasfound guilty of leading Saanich police on a six-mile car chase that at one point reached an estimated speed of 110 m.p.h. early March 2.

Diehl's counsel said his client could not be guilty of dangerous driving as no court had convicted a person of the offence on excessive speed alone.

Police testified that Diehl's car was in excellent mechanical condition.

Ostler said there was much more than speed involved as the accused had driven on narrow roads, some under construction, and had "deliberately incurred risks."

Ostler added that it was speed coupled with other factors notably the human element and this indicated dangerous driving.

Wayne K. Blocka, 19, of 837 Devenshire, was given a suspended sentence and placed on a one-year probation.

He pleaded guilty earlier to stealing a $55 pair of leather pants from The Bay.

Air Controllers Continue Strike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defiant U.S. air traffic controllers ignored pleas to return to their radar consoles and control towers today and end their 11-day rebellion. Their leaders said only amnesty and third party mediation would bring them back.

The deadlock could be settled in 24 hours or less, said F. Lee Bailey, if amnesty were granted and President Nixon stepped in to appoint a mediator.

Bailey, executive director of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, read as directed under a court-ordered agreement a statement ordering controllers "who are fit and able" to return on their next normal tour of duty.

The order apparently fell on deaf ears. The Federal Aviation Administration said there was little noticeable change in the number of absent controllers who have been calling in sick since the dispute began Wednesday of last week.

Only 69 of 153 controllers scheduled to work on the Friday night shift showed up at the FAA's key regional control centre at Islip, L.I., which directs high altitude jet traffics in several Eastern states. On the first shift today, 26 of 56 called in sick. At the Chicago centre, 78 of 134 reported in on the night shift, about the same as on previous nights.

"Just because Bailey and the others say go back to work—that doesn't mean anything," said Larry Johnson, a PATCO spokesman at the Washington control centre in Leesburg, Va. "We're sick."

Although flight delays and cancellations were common—especially in the East and Midwest where schedules have been cut by half—the airline industry for the first time reported shorter delays and fewer cancellations, indicating it was beginning to adjust.

PATCO, the largest of three major groups representing the country's 9,000 air controllers, has complained repeatedly during the last two years that the air traffic control system is unsafe because equipment is too old to handle the heavy high speed jet traffic and that controllers are overworked to the point of exhaustion.

It has accused the government of refusing to negotiate these grievances and of trying to weaken its influence as a union.

Sheffield Pushed To Division Edge

LONDON (CP) — John Morrissey scored a goal worthy of the English League soccer champions today and gave Everton a 1-0 victory over Sheffield Wednesday. The losers are on the brink of dropping into the Second Division next season.

Morrissey whipped the ball home five minutes from the game's end.

Everton, already crowned as English League champion, leads the Division I standings with 65 points with one match to go. Leeds United, 2-1 winner over Burnley, is second with 57 points and two matches still to play.

Everton's victory left four teams at the foot of Division I, all of them wondering who will take the big drop into the Second Division.
